The New French President. MARSHAL MACMAHON'S CAREER.

The MacMahons are descended from Brian Boru, who was King of Ireland in 1014, and acquired great renown as the conqueror of the Danes, over whom he gained a decisive victory at Clontarf. The French MacMahons are descended from the two brothers, Maurice and John, who settled in France in the year 1760, the first of whom shared the fortunes of Prince Edward in Scotland, served in the Spanish army, and afterwards was made captain in the French service; in the second was created Marquis d'Equilly, and admitted to the estates of Burgundy. The MacMahons became a fighting race, and their names frequently occur in the French military annals, sharing in the disasters as well as the glories which attended the French arms. Marie-Edmond-Parice-Marie MacMahon, who has been elected President of the French Republic, was born at Autun, in the department of Saone-et-Loire, in 1808. MacMahon received his military education at St. Cyr, and at the age of 19 was sub-lieutenant of the 4th Hussars, of which his brother was then captain. He soon saw active service. Proceeding to Africa with the 20th Regiment, he engaged in the Algerian war, and in the year 1830 had won the Cross of the Legion of Honor, which he received from Gen. Clauzel on the field of battle. Next year he was appointed lieutenant in the 8th Cuirassiers, and in 1832, as aid-de-camp to Gen. Achard, he shared in the expedition to Belgium, and won the Cross of the Order of Leopold by his bravery at the siege of Antwerp. This campaign over he returned to Africa, and there acquired still greater distinction. At the close of the successful battle of Terchia, it is related that General Achard wished to send a message to Count Bulbiers, at Blidah, between three and four miles off, instructing him to change the order of his march. This message he entrusted to MacMahon and as the journey was dangerous, offered to send a squadron of mounted chasseurs with him. Declining the escort, MacMahon rode off alone, and had just approached a broad deep ravine about 600 yards from Blidah, when suddenly he perceived a host of Arabs in full pursuit of him from every side. Seeing there was no alternative but to jump the treacherous gulf or be butchered by his pursuers, he put spurs to his horse, reached the bank, and dashed the ravine at a bound. The pursuing Arabs recoiled from so dangerous a leap, and only sent after the daring soldier a shower of bullets as horse and rider rolled over on the other side, with the animal's leg broken. While balls still whistled around him, MacMahon engaged himself from the wounded steed, and reached the town safely. In July, 1852, he was made General of Division, and advanced through the successive grades in the Legion of Honor until he received the Grand Cross, September, 1855. When in April, 1855, at the outbreak of the war with Russia, MacMahon was recalled to Paris, he had served about 25 years in Africa, obeying with military precision the several governments which had in the meantime ruled France, supporting Napoleon as loyally as he did the Bourbon Charles X. He proceeded from Paris to the seat of war in the Crimea, where he commanded a division of infantry in Marshal Bugeo's corps. In the final assault on Sebastopol (September 8, 1855), he had the perilous honor of leading the attack on the Malakoff, which formed the key to the Russian defense. In a few moments, owing to the irremediable error of his corps, he penetrated the fort, and there resisted for hours the desperate attacks of the Russians. While in this dangerous position MacMahon received orders to return from Felixstow, who had been told that the Malakoff was mined. Reluctant to give up advantages he had so dearly gained, he answered: "I will hold my ground, dead or alive," and, true to his word, he remained until the Russians, baffled by the obstinacy and heroism of the French, began a headlong retreat, and Sebastopol was won. This daring exploit, which virtually ended the war, won MacMahon world-wide fame, and secured him, with the Grand Cross, the rank of Senator. When peace returned him from the Malakoff he was recalled to Paris, where he served in Europe, he returned to the scene of his early campaigns, and was soon actively engaged in subduing the bold and intrepid mountain tribes of Kabylia. In a short time he received command of the land and sea forces of Algeria, and was reposing on his well-earned laurels when called to the field by the outbreak of war with Austria. In command of the Second Army of the Alps, he rendered signal services at Magenta. In one week Napoleon had to give up the Austrians across the Ticino, turned their flank, and forced them to give battle. Attacked unexpectedly at the Bridge of Magenta, where the Austrians had concentrated 170,000 men, the French resisted for several hours, but were on the point of giving way when MacMahon, who had early in the day crossed the river further up with the view of executing a flank movement, suddenly changed his plans, hastened to the battle-field, laid down on the Austrians with irresistible force, and utterly routed them, capturing 7,000 prisoners. He was rewarded on the field with the title of Duke of Magenta and created Marshal of France. At the outbreak of the Franco-German war great hopes were placed on MacMahon. He received command of the Army of the South, and moved towards the frontier. He encountered (August 6, 1870) the German forces at Worth, and was forced to retreat in disorder to Sedan, where he proceeded to reorganize the scattered forces retreating from different points on the frontier with the view of defending La Capelle. While so engaged he was ordered to suspend the relief of Metz, and thus retarded the advance of the victorious Germans on Paris. He entered promptly on the disastrous march which ended at Sedan, where the army was forced to surrender, and where he was dangerously wounded early in the day by a shell. He suffered severely from this wound for some time, but resumed his military duties about the time the Commune was proclaimed in Paris, and the city was held against a National Government. He conducted the successful operations successfully, and eventually aided President Thiers in re-establishing order and placing the Republic on a firmer basis. His loyalty was never impeached, although it was generally believed that he retained a strong attachment to Napoleon III, and obeyed the doubtful orders because it was the established determination rather than from the conviction that it was the best form that could be adopted for the French people.

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION.

which can be cured by a timely resort to this standard preparation, as has been proved by the hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors. It is acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable preparation ever introduced for the relief and cure of all Lung complaints, and is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years. When resorted to in season it seldom fails to effect a speedy cure in the most severe cases of Coughs, Bronchitis, Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza, Asthma, Colds, Sore Throat, Pains or Soreness in the Chest and Side, Liver Complaint, Bleeding at the Lungs, &c. Wistar's Balsam does not dry up a Cough, and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs, and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.
