The Strange Metamorphosis

"Why, I should be able to recover all I have lost, of course," said Mr. Bultitude. He thought his brother-in-law had grown very dull.
"Ah, but I mean what's to become

"You?" repeated Paul (he had not thought of that). "Well, hum, from what I know and what you know that I know about your past life, you can't expect me to encourage you to remain "No," said Uncle Marmaduke

"But," said Paul, willing to make all reasonable concessions, "anything I can do to advance your prospectssuch as paying you passage out to New York, you know, and so on—I should be very ready to do."

"Thank you," said the other.

"And even, if necessary, provide you with a small fund to start afresh upon with a small fund to start afresh upon. Honestly," said Paul, "you will not find me difficult to deal with." "It's a dazzling proposition," remarked Paradine, dryby. "You have such an alluring way of putting things. But the fact is, you'll hardly believe it, but I'm remarkably well off here. I am indeed. Your son, you know, though am indeed. Four son, yet an indeed. Four son, yet an indeed form, really makes, as they say of a marmalade in the advertisements, an admirable substitute. I doubt, I do assure you, whether you yourself would have received me with quite the same warmth and hospitality I have met with from him."

"So do I," said Paul; "very much." "Just so; for, without your admirable business capacity and extraordinary firmness of character, you know, he has, if you'll excuse me saying so, a more open, guileless nature, a more entire and touching faith in his fel-low-man and brother-in-law, than were ever yours."

"To say that to me," said Paul, hotly. "is nothing less than sheer impudence."

"My dear Paul (it does seem duced odd to be talking to a little shrimp like you as a grown-up brother-inlaw. I shall get used to it presently, I daresay) I flatter myself I am a man of the world. We're dealing with one another now, as the lawyers have it, it arm's length. Just put yourself in y place (you're so remarkably ple's pl cus, you know). Look at the thing from my point of view. Accily dropering in at your office to loan from anyone I chanced to meet on the premises, I find myself, to my surprise, welcomed with effusion into what I then imagined to be your arms. More than that, I was invited here for an indefinite time, all my little eccentricities unnoticed, overlooked. I was deeply touched (it struck me, I confess, at one time that you must be touched, too), but I made the best use of my opportunities. I made hay while the sun shone." "Do you mean to make me lose my temper?" interrupted Paul. "It will not take much more." 'I have no objection. I find men, as a rule, easier to deal with when they have once lost their temper, their heads so often go too. But to return: a man with nerve and his fair share of brains, like myself, only wants a capitalist (he need not be a million-aire) at his back to conquer the world. It's not by my means my first campaign, and I've had reverses, but I see victory in my grasp, sir, in my grasp at last!" Paul groaned. "Now you—it's not your fault, I know, a mere defect of constitution; but you, as a speculator, were, if venture to put it so, not worth your salt: no boldness, no dash, all caution. But your promising son is a regular whale on speculation, and I may tell you that we stand in together in some little ventures that would very probably make your hair stand on end-you wouldn't have touched them. And yet there's money in every one of them." "I daresay there is," said Paul savagly; "I won't have any of my money in them"

"You don't know much about these things, you see," said Marmaduke; "I tell you I have my eye on some fine openings for capital." Your pockets were always very fine openings for capital," retorted

'Ha, ha, deuced sharp that! But, to come to the point, you were always a sensible kind of a fellow, and you must see that, for me to back up and upset this young rascal who has stepped into your slippers, might be morally meritorious enough, but, treating it from a purely pecuniary point of view, it's not business."

"I see," said Mr. Buititude, heavily; [ ] then you side against me."
"Did I ever say I would side against you? Let us hear first what you propose to do."

Paul, upon this, explained that, as he believed the stone still retained its ne beneved the stone still retained its power of granting one wish to any other person who happened to get hold of it, his idea was to get possession of it somehow from Dick, who probably would have it about him somewhere, and then pass it on to some one whom he could trust not to misuse it so base-good idea that, Paul, my boy," said Paradine, smiling; "but you don' imagine our young friend would be quite such an idiot as not to see your game. Why, he would pitch the stone in the gutter, and stamp it to powder rather than let you get hold of it."

"He's quite capable of it," said Paul;
"in fact, he threatened to do worse than that. I doubt if I shall ever be able to manage it myself; but what am I to do? I must try, and I've no time to lose about it, either."

"I tell you this," said Marmaduke,
"If you let him see you here it's all up with you. What you want is some friend to manage this for you, some one he won't suspect. Now, suppose I were willing to risk it for you?"
"You!" cried Paul, with involuntary distrust. "Why not?" said Marmaduke, with a touch of feeling. "Ah, I see, you can't trust me. You've got an idea into your head that I am a thoroughpaced rascal, without a trace of human feeling about me. I daresay I deserve it, I daresay I do; but it's not generous, my boy, for all that I hope to show you your mistake yet, if you give me the chance. You allow yourself to be prejudiced by the past; that's where you make your mistake. I only put before you clearly and plainly what it was I was giving up in helping you. A fellow may have a hard, cynical kind of way of putting things, and yet, take my word for it, Paul, have a heart as tender as a spring chicken underneath. I believe I'm something like that myself. I tell you I'm sorry for you. I don't like to see a family man of your position in such a regular duce of a hole. I feel bound to give you a lift out of it, and let my prospects take their own chance. I leave the grattude to you. When I've done kick me down the doorsteps, if you like. I shall go out into the rld with a glow of self-approval (and rapid motion) warming my system. Take my advice, don't attempt to tackle Master Dick yourself. Leave

"If I could only make up my mind to trust you!" muttered Paul. "The old distrust," cried Marmaduke; "you can't forget. You won't believe a poor devil like me can have any gratitude, any disinterestedness left in him. Never mind, I'll go. I'll leave it to you I'll send Dick in here, and we will see whether he's such a fool as you think him." "No," said Paul, "no; I feel you're right; that would never do." "It would be for my advantage, I think," said the other; "but you had better take me while I am in a magnanimous mood; the opportunity may never occur again. Come, am I to help you or not? Yes or no?"

"I must accept," said Paul, reluctantly. "I can't find Boaler now, and it might take hours to make him see what I wanted. I'll trust to your hon-or. What shall I do?" or. What shall I do?"

"Do? Get away from this; he'll be coming in here very soon to see me. Run away and play with the children, or hide in the china closet—anything but stay here."

"I-I must be here while you are managing him," objected Paul. "Nonsense!" said Paradine, angrily.
"I tell you it will spoil all, unless you -who's that? it's his step-too late now-dash it all! Behind that screen, quick-don't move for your life ill I tell you you may come out!" Mr. Bulttude had no choice; there was just time to set up an old folding screen which stood in the corner of the room and slip behind it before the door

(To be Continued.) A SONG OF WAR.

Wars and rumors of wars, And slaughter the men like cattle! A little of glory, but more of gain, So away-away to the battle! Away! till the rivers shall all run red With the blood-the blood of the nations shed!

Wars and rumors of wars-Swords gleam, and the rifles rattle! And what are their lives to the weeping wives,
Who sigh for the slain in battle? Away-away to the battle brave,

And earth to the soldier gives—a grave! Wars and rumors of wars. Till the fancied wrongs are righted; And bitter tears through the lonely years In homes, by the red wars blighted. Away—away to the frenzied fight, Till the bugles sound the last "Good night." -Atlanta Constitution.

Kruger.

Democratio Ways of the Transvaal's President.

Lives in a Modest House and Is Devoted to His Family and Also to Coffee -Hatred of the English. Imagine a man less than 5 feet 7 inches in height, but in build like a giant; his hair white with years; his features homely and coarse, wearing an ill-fitting black double-breasted frock coat reaching beneath the knees; such a man is Oom Paul. Void of booklearning, apparently not gifted above the average man, armed only with his natural craftiness, he has been a thorn in the side of the greatest diplomatists and statesmen in England for years. He was born on Oct. 10, 1825, near the present town of Graff Reinet. Colony. His parents were South African farmers, who left their home in Holland a few years before Paul was born, hoping for good fortune in the new country. But it did not come. They remained mere squatters, and at the time Paul was born his parents owned only two or three slaves, which meant little. The future president of the Transvaal was christened S. J. Paul Kruger, but at an early age the first two initials were dropped. He uses them now when signing state papers. He was taught early to pray and to handle a gun. He was a fearless boy. When he was nine his parents resented British regulations and moved to the northeastern part of Natal, not far from Ladysmith, the first important strategic point in this war. There were two other children in the family, a girl and a boy, both younger than Paul. The brother was killed in a native fight in the Natal colony, and the sister lived to see her brother made president of the Transvalal.

When Kruger was about 15 years of age his father, sister and he went with the bullock team some distance into the Orange Free State. The senior Kruger was forced to remain and told Paul to take the team home and to look after his sister. "I'll take care of her, father," was the reply. Everything went well until Paul and his sister were about five miles from home. Then a panther appeared in the road. The sixteen bullocks in the team took fright and ran away. The jolting of the wagon threw the sister from the seat into the roadway, where she was at the mercy of the panther. Paul, though unarmed, ran to her rescue and tackled the panther. It was a flerce struggle, and Kruger believed once or twice that the panther was going to prove too much for him. But finally he managed to kill the animal with his knife.

It was in the latter part of 1879 that I first met Kruger. The Boers at that time were on the verge of a war with the British. When I was introduced to Kruger he was suspicious of me, and it was only when assured that I was an American that he became at all talkative. In those days Kruger would talk English, but since the visit of Sir Henry Lock to Pretoria in 1893 he has positively refused to utter one word of English. The Kruger of 1879 was a poor man. He had difficulty in supplying his family with the necessities of life, for besides his wife he had ten children to care for. He lived then in a farmhouse, but he left the farm to care for itself, for he had a more important matter to attend to—the creation of a revolution against the English. Gen. P. J. Joubert, com-mander of the Boer forces, and vice-Gen. P. J. Joubert, compresident of the Transvaal, young Pretorius, son of the republic's first president, and Kruger were planning the Boer uprising which came the follow ing year, resulting in the independence of the Boers in 1891. It was these three that managed the campaign against the English forces at Majuba Hill.

The next time I met Kruger was in 1894. Although he was now the president of a ration, and reputed to be worth $5,000,000, I found him as simple and as democratic as he was in the days of 1879, when he was unknown to fame and had hard work to support his family. It was on this occasion that I realized the great qualities of this man. He cordially invited me to become his guest during the short time that I was to remain in Pretoria, an invitation which I readily accepted. He would not talk English to me on this occasion, so I had to carry on conversation with him through other members of the family. The old president never tired of talking about the United States, designating the republic as his big brother, and wishing that he were in a position to make a treaty with America in order that he might favor American merchants in trade. He often talked of the days when he drove his falther's old bullock team, and now prides himself on the fact that he is still able to crack a 30-foot whip over sixteen bullocks. Kruger is devoted to his wife, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, while they in turn adore him. He lives in a modest house, which stands black from the sidewalk about fifteen feet. There is a grass plot in front and a sentry-box inside of the iron railing. This house was presented to him by a syndicate. When the volksraad is in session a soldier is stationed in front of the president's house and no one, excepting officials, may enter the residence during the day without permission. After 7 o'clock in the evening all are welcome to the chief executive's home.

Every morning at 6 o'clock a negro servant takes a cup of black coffee and a big pipe filled with tobacco to the president's room. As soon as he has drunk the coffee Kruger rises, and smokes the pipe while he is dressing. He is down stairs by 6:30 o'clock, and is ready to lead the family prayers at 7 o'clock. Breakfast is served about 7:30 a.m. His morning hours are taken up with maltters of state and the dictating of letters. The dinner hour is 1 BENEFITS AT END OF 25 YEARS. o'clock. At all the meals Kruger says grace before bread is broken. He takes a short nap after the noon meal and is ready promptly at 3 o'clock in the afternoon to receive callers. The supper is served at 6 o'clock, and the conclusion of this repast ends all the worriment of the day for Kruger. Many writers have told how hot cups of thick, black coffee are served at frequent intervals. Every person received is served with coffee. Besides his salary of $40,000 a year, Kruger gets $10,000 annually for coffee money. There is a two-gallon kettle of coffee always hot in the kitchen. Since Kruger was elected president in 1881 he has been confronted with some trying times. In 1883 his country was in a bankrupt condition. It looked as if a famine was going to overtake the land, but then gold was found in the Barbeton district. A messenger from the new gold fields took a sack of gold, containing twenty ounces, to the president, presenting it to him as the first yield of gold from the Transvaal. Kruger was astounded when he saw the gold. He asked where it came from, and was informed that it was from the Barberton district. "Is there any more left?" asked rich in gold ore, and that millions of pounds could be secured where that "Thank God! My country is saved!" was his reply. Kruger often expressed his regrets

He was told that the country was that he was not able to receive an early education. His only book for years was a Bible. On the occasion of laying the last bolt in the Pretoria-Delagoa Bay Railroad, Nov. 1894, the president went out in his private train to perform the act. At Bronkher Spruit a delegation of Boers met the presidential party. Kruger had to speak. Out from the railroad station, about a mile distant, could be seen the three grouped graves of the rear guard of a British regiment, which had been annihilated by the Boers. The present trouble was beginning to make itself manifest, at least Kruger was far-sighted enough to realize that the storm would burst before very long. Looking significant-ly toward the graves of the British soldiers, Kruger said to the two hundred Boers that had gathered round

"This is our country. Never give it up. Remember that we fought for it and made it what it is. I will never! never!! never permit a foreign foe to take the Transvalal from you so long as I shall live." JOHN E. OWENS.
