"I say, Fitz, what do you think of it?"

"You're a handsome rascal, Maurice," answered the Englishman, who had washed his young friend, amusement in his sober eyes. "Hangily, there are no young women present."

"Go to! I'll lay odds that our hostess is under 25."

"I meant young women of 16 or 17. Women such as Madame have long since passed the uniform fever."

"Not when it has lace, my friend, court lace. Well, forward to the dining hall."

Both were rather disappointed to find that Madame would be absent until dinner. Fitzgerald could not tell exactly why he was disappointed, and he was angry with himself for the vague regret. Maurice, however, found consolation in the demure French maid who served them. Every time she smiled she made a courtesy and every time she left the room Maurice nudged Fitzgerald.

"Smile, confound you, smile!" he whispered. "There's never a maid but has her store of gossip, and gossip is information."

"Fshaw!" said Fitzgerald, helping himself to cold ham and chicken.

"Wine, Messieurs?" asked the maid. "Ah, then, Madame offers the cellar," said Maurice.

"Yes, Messieurs. There is champagne, champagne, chablis, tokayer and sherry."

"Bring us some chambertin, then," "Oui, Messieurs."

"Hurry along, my Hebe," said Maurice.

The maid was not on familiar terms with the classics, but she told the butler in the pantry that the smooth-faced one made a charming Captain.

"Keep your eyes open," grumbled the butler. "The Englishman is a dandy. A director's skirt of palest yellow satin, covered with embroidery and pearls, and caught with a long girdle with pearl tassels; a very high head-dress of pearl and silver filigree, with collar to match; her train was carried by two pages in court suits of the exact colors of her Excellency's dress. His Excellency, who inherits the good looks of his beautiful mother, Lady Dudley, wore the magnificent uniform of a Napoleonic marshal, with splendorous white and gold, with splendid jewels, and Lady Ellen white satin with silver and green scarf."

Since so many Londoners make it a point to attend the annual Horse Show in Toronto, the following clipping from the Toronto Globe will be of interest:

The programme for the visit of the Governor-General and the Countess of Grey during horse show week has been definitely arranged as follows: Arriving on Monday evening, April 24, they will be the guests of his honor the Lieutenant-Governor at Government House. A dinner will be given in honor of his Excellency at the Toronto Club the same evening. On Tuesday evening the event will be the Royal Canadian Yacht Club dinner at the King Edward Hotel. On Wednesday afternoon his Excellency will open the horse show, and on Thursday evening the royal and gubernatorial parties will attend the Paderewski concert at Massey Music Hall, proceeding afterwards to the horse show. On Thursday a luncheon at the Hunt Club will be given by the master, Mr. George Beaudouin. On Thursday evening a state dinner will be given by his honor the Lieutenant-Governor. The event of Friday afternoon will be a reception at Government House, and on the evening the vice-regal party will return to Ottawa.

Miss Jap Moore's departure for New York on Wednesday afternoon was the occasion of a gathering of some thirty at the G. T. R. Hotel. Miss Moore, who is a very bright and attractive girl (not yet out of her teens), carries with her the best wishes of a whole host of friends, by whom she will be very much missed. Some of those who assembled at the station were Dr. Charles Moore, the Misses Moore, Miss Scatcherd, Miss Freeman, Miss Geraldine Biddome, Miss Helen Richardson, Miss Nenone Carling, Messrs. George Guy, George King, Hale, Walter Reid, Walter Little, Jim Boucher and others.

Said the first: "We will leave the gentlemen to their cigars; and when they have ceased to interest you, you will find in the uniform fever."

"And you will sing?" said Maurice to the countess.

"If you wish." She was most beautiful when she smiled, and she smiled on Maurice.

"I confess," said he, "that being a prisoner of a certain circumstance, is a fine life."

"What wicked eyes he has," said the countess, as she and Madame entered the music room.

"Do not look into them too often, my dear," was the rejoinder. "I have asked not other sacrifice than that you should occupy his attention and make him fall in love with you."

"Ah, Madame, that will be easy enough. It is to prevent me from falling in love with him? He is very handsome."

"You are laughing." "Yes, I am laughing. It will be such an adventure, a souvenir for my old age—and my old age forget me!"

The men lit their cigars and smoked in silence.

"Colonel," said Maurice at last, "will you kindly tell me what all this means?"

"Never ask your host how old his wife is. If he is proud of it, he will tell you." He blew the smoke under the candle shades and watched it as it darted up. "Don't you find it comfortable?" I should.

"Conscience will not lie down at one's bidding."

"The Colonel turned to Fitzgerald. 'I hope that, when you are liberated, you will forget the manner in which you were brought here.'"

"I shall forget nothing," curtly. "The devil! I can not fight you; I am too old!"

Fitzgerald said nothing, and continued to play with his emptied wine glass.

"The Princess Alexia," went on the Colonel, "has a bulldog. I have always wondered till now how the nationality of the dog was. The bulldog neither forsakes nor forgives; he is an Englishman."

This declaration was succeeded by other intervals of silence. The Englishman was thinking of his father; the thoughts of Maurice were anywhere but at the chateau; the Colonel was contemplating both, shrewdly.

"Well, to the ladies, gentlemen; it is half after nine."

The countess was seated at the piano, improvising. Madame was before the fireplace, arranging the pieces on a chess board.

At the chateau, the Colonel was a table littered with books, magazines and illustrated weeklies.

"Do you play chess, Monsieur?" "I do not."

"Well, Colonel, we will play a game and show the world it is done." (To be continued.)

Mrs. Hamilton will hold a reception after the ceremony in honor of her daughter's marriage at the manse.

Miss Adah Martin, of Princeton, is the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Woolverton, in Grand avenue. This afternoon, during the past few years, Mrs. Frank MacKellan, of Hamilton, always a favorite in London, Mr. W. H. Hewlett, Edna Kent, second vice-president, Miss Mary Meredith, secretary, Miss Eleanor Pennington, treasurer, Miss Madge Smith, standard bearer, Miss Geraldine Biddome. It was arranged that the monthly meetings be continued during the summer on the first Tuesday of every month. On Tuesday, April 4, the meeting will be held at Mrs. Kent's, Parkview, at half past 3 o'clock. The programme will be arranged by Miss Madge Smith and Miss Edna Kent, and the name and motto be decided upon. Much enthusiasm was developed at the meetings, and the success of the undertaking was assured.
