Coorans had one bad inning, the sixth, in the second game, or the customers would have seen the Tecs win two ball games all in the space of a few hours. It was variety anyway, as heretofore it's been the pitchers who have had to wear pained expressions as they mediated upon the support Yesterday, just at this moment, it was the supporting cast that was to blame.

Then the breaks appeared again of the constant appeared again of the cons Yesterday, just at this moment, it was the supporting east that was to blame.

Then the breaks appeared again, or inconsistency probably, as, after getting a triple, double and single in the morning in four trips, Schaefer, having failed to get a hit at all in the afternoon, came up with the tieing and winning run set to come in in the ninth, and hit a force-out instead.

Two bang-bang triples by McNamara, London's new outfielder from Washing-ton, and Schaefer following a walk, effected two tallies in the London third. In the fifth Wernke hurled himself right into trouble with two walks and Mc-Namara's double sandwiched in between, Mostade's double relieving the pressure on the bags to the extent of one tally. Thut's sacrifice fly, a walk to Boyle and Churry's double completed rough work for three more runs. Ernie Neitzke got by the sixth, but in the seventh three singles, a walk and Thut's double turned in three counters, and another trio was added Stimpson safe on Vermilyea's misplay and Getsie on a choice were scored by Schaefer's double. London Tecs broke their long losing streak, and the faithful clients, and probably a large overflow from the chilly opening day of some weeks ago, saw them turn the trick yesterday morning in the first of the holiday bill by a 2 to 5 count. In the afternoon the Braves had a relapse and lost a 5 to 4 argument, but not before they had threatened to lay the old Schwartje jinx for good and all with a two-run rally that felt one run short of making the affair eat into the lunch hour. The Tecs didn't gain much on the day as far as the standing goes, but they did get the crowd warmed up to something like the old fervor with their sustained clouting after the Aces had blown Lefty McCallum off the hill in the first inning with a shrill cadenza of base warblers, Jeanes' triple striking a heavy note along with Lopez's and Dowell's far-from-squeaky two-ply knocks. A brace of triples in staccato by McNamara and Schaefer in the third was the start of retaliation for McCallum's rough treatment, and they laid a fuse under Wernke in the fifth which brought Ernest Neitzke, dapper, hard-hitting ex-Tec of a couple of seasons ago, forth as a relief pitcher. They unloosed an offensive against Neitzke, too, meanwhile giving Haines, who took up from the second inning, interproof support.

Erratic shooting seemed to be the cause of Saints being one goal down. They were awarded two corners in succession, but failed to convert. At the other end Taylor also missed a great opportunity. At this period Turner of W. O. R. was injured and retired. From the throw down the Saints again took up the running, but Whitelaw missed
