TO INTERFERE. Sunset Cox Heads a Deputation to the White House—The Gist of His Remarks and the President's Reply.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.-A large dele gation of democratic congressmen called upon the president to-day and presented a petition, urging him to exert his influence to obtain a respite for O'Donnell. The O'Donnell's Brother Tells the Condemned delegation in cluded these congressmen: Cox and Robinson, New York; Morrison, Springer and Finerty, Illinois; General Lefevre and Foran, Ohio ; Murphy, Iowa;

Mr. Cox was spokesman, and in the course of his remarks alluded to the many distinguished Americans of Irish descent in this country, concluding with, "And you, Mr. President, are proud to be reckoned among the descendants of this gallant race," at which the president smiled and bowed. Mr. Cox argued that O'Donnell was not an avenger, but was merely taking the voyage of an ordinary passenger, and that the killing was the result of an affray. He also said: "Besides, it is thought by many that the trial was unfair, not to say cruel. The authoriwas unfair, not to say cruel. The authorities at the Cape claimed jurisdiction. It is a law of the realm that the first port nation whose laws are broken is the locus in quo for trial. Custom and law unite to condemn the proceeding. It is contrary to English jurisprudence. By Jove, who ever has heard of such procedure as his? Pontius Pilate was an honorable man compared to him. The trial has given party violence suprement in Iraland. There are the procedure as the procedur pared to him. The trial has given party violence supremacy in Ireland. There are five million people in Ireland without arms. They are prevented by England herself from going on the field of battle where a contest might ensue. They cannot win themselves, and what is left them to do? Why, just what many American people would do if placed in a like condition. They would resort to violence, and take the means to accomplish the ends a small man would in an attempt to whip John Sullivan.

"In my opinion the Irish will act in their own behalf and destroy, not only the English parliament buildings, but ruin other interests, as far as possible. I can't say how nor when. If I knew, it wouldn't be for me to tell. But I do know such procedure will be taken. I'm opposed to raising more money to aid in the trial of Irish prisoners. O'Donnell's trial has been a farce. Mr. Cox added that the deputation represented seventy million people of Irish decent, among which was a large vote in which they were all not a little interested. "If," said Mr. Cox, "this hurried execution takes place a shudder will run through our people."

A member of the deputation drew attention to the report that O'Donnell was formerly a Union soldier.

The president in reply said that the department of state would at once telegraph to Minister Lowell to make all possible inquiry regarding O'Donnell's citizenship, and he (the president) would take whatever action he could with propriety.

Mr. Cox handed the president a copy of an appeal prepared by the Clan Na Gael association, which has been sent to each member of congress. Another account of the Egyptian defeat at Suakim says spies entered Suakim and reported that Hill men were hovering near the town. Mahmoud Taper Pasha, anxious to efface the defeat at Tokkar, on account of which a court martial was pending, sent forward 500 black troops and 200 bashi bazouks against the Hill tribes, he himself remaining at Suakim. Three hours march from the town the Egyptians were attacked by several thousand men. The Egyptians fought stubbornly, but were cut to pieces. Fifty, of whom half were officers, escaped. This defeat of troops which had hitherto been regarded as the flower of the army has caused great consternation here, as it tends to show the task of opening the route from Suakim to Berber with the material at Baker pasha's disposal as nearly a hopeless one.
