

Sir Arthur Currie, 3.

so that they can provide something to eat for their meetings. I do not see any objection to using the professors' lounge for this purpose. The club meetings seem to be held in the evening and not many of the professors would be there at that time. If, however, there is any valid objection against the double use of the space, I think that a special room for the clubs (with kitchenette) should be provided.

I return the plans herewith.

Sincerely yours,

P.S. I met Mr. Fetherstonhaugh, the architect, at dinner on Saturday night and I asked him whether he did not think that it would be possible to add a third storey and at the same time keep the general appearance of the building. He said he thought that it might be done. Is not this the solution of the problem? We could have a number of class rooms and offices and would not be continually confronted by lack of space. Without that third storey it is quite possible that within a few years we shall be in as much need of class rooms as we are now.
