

the larger cities as well as the rural districts there are those who from their position, experience and knowledge of matters medical, could do much towards building up in this country such an expression of opinion as would tend materially to strengthen and consolidate the very best interests of our profession. It is generally acknowledged that there are more medical journals than receive remunerative support, and that much labour, zeal and self-sacrifice are necessary on the part of both editors and publishers in order to promote the vitality of this form of medical literature. Such efforts are worthy of the highest commendation, for by means of local medical journals, many facts are brought to light, which otherwise might have passed, unrecorded. In Canada, as in Great Britain, hospital reports, are yearly acquiring a greater degree of importance, and our medical students are being stimulated thus towards the cultivation of one of the most necessary branches of study, viz., to observe rightly and report intelligently. The country as well as the city practitioner should contribute regularly to our journals. The city with its extensive hospitals, large libraries, well-organized medical societies, has very great advantages; and yet it has been remarked by an able writer in favour of the country medical man, that "original thought is usually best cultivated in comparative solitude." A high degree of excellence in medical journalism can scarcely be expected in so new a field of enquiry, and considering the efforts put forth to fan into vitality such able journals as the London Lancet and London Medical Times and Gazette, Edinburgh Medical Journal, and others of like
