

MISCELLANEOUS
REFLECTIONS
UPON THE PEACE, &c.

THE Right of making Peace and War is universally allowed to be the Prerogative of the Crown, as the Power of examining whether this Prerogative be properly or improperly exercised, remains in the King's hereditary great Council, and in the Representative of the People. But notwithstanding this, the whole Nation is so much interested in an Event of this Kind, and every Individual, who either has the Possession, or the Means of acquiring Property, has so many Grounds to hope some Things, and to fear others,
