taken at a meal. When cold weather drives the ducks to the marshes and cypress swamps of the south, there, too, the succulent plants abound and are eaten by several species.

Not only are the waterfowl of our own country regaled by this useful little plant. Most of the warmer parts of the old world furnish haunts congenial to its simple tastes. There, as in our own country, it furnishes food for the ducks and geese which in their proper seasons visit the reedy marches along their paths of migration.
