Jennie's Choice

A sinking sun. "Bang!" roared the old brass cannon on the long pier at Rockaway beach.

"Cast off the bow-line!" shouted the captain; and with the parting salute the beautiful steamer sped swiftly and merrily over the waters, carrying its load of pleasure-seekers towards their destination.

Two fine looking gentlemen were seated on the forward part of the deck, watching the droll antics of a quartette of peero minstrels who were trying to amuse the passengers.

"Marks," spoke the youngest of the two, "to-morrow I have a difficult case to attend to in the surgical line, and I need your assistance. Now promise, old fellow, that to-morrow morning, at half-past ten, sharp, I shall see you at North, lighting a cigar.
