

English Ankle Straps

FOR CHILDREN.

Twenty years ago, when the young men and women of today were children, they all wore English Ankle Strap Slippers. Then, for one reason or another, they were supplanted by other styles; but again the demand for the old-fashioned, good wearing slippers has set in, and we are selling a great many. We have them in Patent Leather and Brown Kid. They are hand made, and smoother finished, prettier looking or better wearing goods you cannot find.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL OF SCIENCE

RIVERSIDE, N. B., July 5.—The Summer School of Science is now well under way, with an attendance that is constantly increasing, and everything is moving along satisfactorily. The weather so far has been delightful, and the visitors, who through the day, are filling their brains with the mysteries of the sciences, are not neglecting to enjoy the exhilarating scenery that the locality affords. The lovely walks about the village and its environs are a treat to all, and are much appreciated by the strangers. Nature has been lavish in her gifts to this favored spot, and the circling hills and valleys, the broad sweep of meadow and the grand stretch of river and bay, present a scene of beauty that calls forth expressions of the highest admiration from all. Since the opening meeting of the school on Tuesday, practically everything has been done in the way of the first day's session. On Wednesday organization was effected and classes arranged. The following time table for the first day, while not to be followed absolutely, will give a practically correct outline of the work for each succeeding day: From 9 a.m. to 10 p.m., physiology, zoology, drawing; 10 o'clock to 11, chemistry, geology, manual training; 11 to 12, physics and literature. From 2 p.m. to 3, botany, with field work from 3 o'clock to 6. Field work will alternate with laboratory practice. The course will include talks on the habits, mode of growth, structure, etc., of plants, the idea being to have it simple. The flora of the neighborhood will be studied. The course in chemistry consists of growing out of the experiments, only the simplest apparatus being used. The work in the department of geology will embrace the practical study of minerals and the practical study of rocks, the physiography and geology of this locality being given special attention. Manual training will take in woodwork, metal work, cardboard and clay modeling, etc., and physics will cover experiments on the pendulum, pendulum motion in water, air and ether. Physics will treat of the structure of the body, circulation of the blood, respiration, etc., zoology covering as far as possible, phases of the subject suitable for all schools, and will include the collecting and classifying of insects and the dissection of common species of the animal kingdom. The course in literature includes Tennyson's shorter poems and George Eliot's "Adam Bede." Drawing will take in free-hand drawing, brush drawing, geometrical and mechanical drawing. Last evening Chancellor Jones of the University of New Brunswick, lectured in assembly hall on Mathematics, which was termed the queen of the sciences. The discourse was a most scholarly one, dealing largely with the history of mathematics in all its branches, and the reasons it should take its place as the foremost of the sciences. To scientific auditors it was a valuable and interesting dissertation, but there is reasonable probability to believe that it went well over the heads of a large part of the audience present. The lecturer was given a vote of thanks, moved by Principal Trueman, and seconded by J. D. Seaman. The first excursion of the session took place today, to the Joggins, the trip being made in the steamer Wilfred C. The weather was about perfect, and the trip across the bay was a delightful one, being greatly enjoyed by the excursionists, who numbered about 100 being practically all the summer school and many from the general public. The steamer left the wharf at Riverside at sunset tonight. On Monday night Dr. Andrews is to lecture on a subject of special interest to farmers, his title being, "Three tons of Hay to the Acre." This should appeal to the sheepy farmers, whose broad marshes stretch away for miles, and yielding, on an average, very little over a half a ton to the acre.

Government But Awaited the Opportunity of Stultifying the Promises of Czar

Stolypin Surrendered to Reactionaries and His Policy Was Open Violation of Law

ST. PETERSBURG, July 6.—St. Petersburg is taking the dissolution very quietly. It apparently does not realize yet that a coup d'etat has been effected. Few troops are visible, and there has been no attempt at disturbance.

The Douma members long expected the dissolution, and a meeting at philosophical, convinced that the government has put itself so plainly in the wrong that the country will thus quickly understand the situation. No parties are issuing proclamations, but several have decided without attempting to hold public demonstrations, to issue a full report of their work in the Douma.

All the evening of its closing day seem to have conspired to vindicate the Douma as against its persistent and unscrupulous accusers. The government is unfortunate in its choice of pretext, and the charges it made against the Social Democrats proved, examination by the Douma committee, to be based not on fresh evidence, but on hackneyed commonplaces of the Douma's policy, which were familiar to the Social Democratic candidates stood for the Douma, and were reiterated again in deputies' speeches.

HYPOCRISY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

As if to maintain a judicial demeanor, the government permitted the Douma to refer the question to a committee, and sent its representative to the committee with material, but when, owing to the amount of time involved in the verification of the evidence, the committee protracted its labor, the government lost patience, threw off its judicial mask, and showed by dissolving the Douma before the committee had time to arrive at a decision on the merits of the case that its whole object in suddenly preferring charges against the Social Democrats was to find a crude and rather unnecessary pretext for dissolution.

The majority of the members of the Douma committee had convinced themselves that the evidence presented by the government was insufficient to warrant a prosecution of more than one, or at the very most two, of the Socialists. By precipitating the dissolution, the government showed that it had an execrable case; secondly, that it did not mind very much whether or not it had a pretext for dissolving the Douma, and thirdly, Sunday, as a whole, is a more convenient day for dissolution than any other.

A CHILDISH MANIFESTO.

The manifesto issued by the government contained such a childish display of British distinction of fact that it hardly irritates a people accustomed to being browbeaten by its government, and even more accustomed to being misled in the phrase about the emperor's power to repeal any law he has given—even fundamental laws—after all, only a formal admission of what most people knew to be the real mind of the government. It has been known that an alteration of the electoral laws was in preparation. The details were not made public, but as far as the general features of the new law were known, surprise is expressed that the changes are not more radical. The reduction in the number of deputies from eleven millionaires is probably intended as a snub to the Poles for their proposal of autonomy, and to the Caucasians as punishment for having sent chiefly socialists to the Douma. Those parts of Siberia where political exiles are in large numbers are deprived of a great part of their representation.

It seems improbable in spite of all its law-breaking that the government will even now succeed in assembling a reactionary or even a predominantly conservative Douma. M. Stolypin has succeeded to the Russian throne, perhaps in the hope of saving a few fragments of constitutional semblance from the wreck; perhaps because, not understanding constitutionalism, he is willing to make partly in good faith, disgraceful concessions to the reactionaries.

THE HAGUE, July 6.—Felix Moschler, chairman of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, speaking of the grave situation in Russia, said today: "It can quite rightly be said that the dissolution of the Douma will give great satisfaction to a great number of people. The ordinary patriotic Russian is about as strong in his support of order and right, and no terrors," as the Englishman, and a great many of them are steeped in the belief that reaction and ultra-conservatism are the one thing necessary in government.

"From the first moment I heard about the threat I felt that the Douma could do nothing else but refuse. And what is going to happen next? I am in touch with a good many Russians here, and I have come to the conclusion that nobody knows. They are very divided in their opinions as to the openness of the situation in Russia, some of them say it is none too soon to take the final step, others believe that it is better to play a waiting game."

"I remember one day asking Mazzini, whose friends I was privileged to have with me, he had been doing. 'Je s'explique,' he replied. And as then France and Italy were honeycombed by secret societies, so now Russia is honeycombed by revolutionary groups. It would be folly to try to predict whether they will find a Napoleon to lead them, or indeed, what direction the movement will take."
