G—I went into a restaurant the other day and asked for some oysters. Then I hesitated, questioning whether the oysters were good this month. The waiter said "Ours are last month's oysters." I said "How is your milk, is it good?" He said, "Cream is not in it." I went out and made a complaint to the manager against the waiter. He told me it was a whole lot easier to get guests than it was to get waiters.

B—I had an experience in a restaurant the other day. After eating some meat and potatoes, I asked for some ice-cream. When the waiter brought it, it had a hair in it and I told him to take it away and bring me some honey. When the honey came, it also had a hair in it so I asked the waiter to bring me some plain apple-sauce. He brought me some apple-sauce and would you believe it, there was a hair in it also. Of course I got mad and told the waiter I wanted to see the manager. When the manager came, I told him my troubles and he said, "Well, they shaved the ice for the ice-cream about an hour ago and I can understand the hair being in that. And, of course, there might easily be a hair in the honey because it came right from the comb, but, as for the apple-sauce, I cannot account for that at all because I know those apples were Baldwins.

G—Why is a bumble-bee like a counterfeit dollar?

B—Because it is a humbug.
