

- Banyan, his imprisonment, 331.
 Burns, his rusticity, 278; his uneasiness and dejection, 283.
 Byron, effect of poetical excitement upon his health, 4; his morality, 60; his classical education and foreign travel, 97; his aristocracy, 278; his dislike to hear poetry called a "profession," 409.
- C.
- Carpenter, Dr., his early experience, 173.
 Carle, its pride in ignorance, 279; and religion, 293.
 Caste-sentiment, 281.
 Cerebral symptoms occasioned by mental labour, 3.
 Charities, intellectual, 351.
 Chemists dependent upon the industrial class, 421.
 Children, the best teachers of languages, 116; their power of imitation, 122.
 Church, the, its felicities and advantages as a profession, 306.
 "Claribel," a Frenchman's reading of, 80.
 Classics, patronized by pedants, 325.
 Class views, 277; spirit, when odious, 289.
 Clergy, the English, their position, 396; their difficulty in attaining disinterestedness of thought, 397.
 Clerical life, its attractions for the intellectual, 398.
 Clock, minute slavery to, 393.
 Coffee, 20.
 Coleridge, his idea of a profession, 411.
 Comfort, dangers of it, 252.
 Commerce, absurd prejudices against, 424.
 Compensation, in the effects of time, 164.
 Competence, certificates of, 209.
 Comte, Auguste, 221; his isolation, 331; his abstinence from newspapers, 377; his peculiar gift, id.
 Contemporaries, jealousy of, 383.
 Contempt, effects of, 282.
 Conversation, general, 322.
 Conversations, general, in England, 320.
 Cook, lesson learned from a, 73.
 Cookery, importance of scientific, 16.
 Coolness of the experienced, 338.
 Cotton-manufacture leaves little spare time for culture, 427.
 Cotton-manufacturers, 426.
 Cowp-r, his horror of towns, 437.
 Cream and ouragoes, 265.
- Creeds, how they protect traditions, 220.
 Criticism, a poor, 274.
 Criticism cannot be ignored, 210.
 Culture, guardians of, 206; the life most favourable to, 332; and industrial occupations, 418.
 Custom and tradition, 403.
 Custom, uses of, 197; art of reforming, 198.
 Customs, bad, to be resisted, 198.
 Cuvier, his paralysis, 41; a model student, 344; his remarkable power of self-direction, 392; and the expedition to Egypt, 403.
- D.
- Degrees, 104.
 Dejeune, 14.
 Delane, Mr. W. F. A., his care of his health, 6.
 Delusions about time, 146.
 Democracy, inevitable defect of a, 293; its power of exclusion, id.; the Parisian, 205.
 Democratic idea, hopes for, 298.
 Deviation in marriage, danger of, 249.
 Dickens, his works, 278; effect of locality on, 432; his need of the London streets, 433.
 Dictionaries, time wasted over, 148.
 Dignity, want of, in democratic communities, 290.
 Dilettantism, 100.
 Diplomacy as a field for the intellect, 427.
 Discipline, work done for, 54; the want of, 55.
 Discussions with ladies, 270.
 Diseased persons, how they injure themselves, 21; their peculiar experience, 32.
 Diseases often permit mental activity, 33.
 Disingenuousness, 218.
 Disinterestedness, 62; want of it in newspapers, 65.
 Doré, Gustave, his studio, 445.
 Drinks, 16.
 Drudgery, 46.
 Dryden, his fluctuation of spirits, 343.
 Dumas, Alexandre, his capacity for work, 9.
 Dürer, Albert, his "Melencolia," 34a.
- E.
- Eagerness, bad effects of, 335.
 Ear, innocence of, 123.
 Early and late work, 329.
 Eccentricity of study, 264.