

The Klondike Nugget

TELEPHONE NUMBER 18 (DAWSON'S PREMIER PAPER) ISSUED DAILY AND SEMI-WEEKLY. GEORGE M. ALLEN, Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES. Daily. Yearly in advance $20.00. For month by carrier in city in advance $3.00.

NOTICE. When a newspaper offers its advertising space at a nominal figure, it is a practical admission of "no circulation."

LETTERS. And Small Packages can be sent to the Creeks by our carriers on the following days: Every Tuesday and Friday to Eldorado, Soanana, Hunker, Dominion, Gold Run.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

$50 Reward.

We will pay a reward of $50 for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of any one stealing copies of the Daily or Semi-Weekly Nugget from business houses or private residences, where same have been left by our carriers.

KLONDIKE NUGGET.

CITIZENS' TICKET.

FOR MAYOR

Henry C. Macaulay.

FOR ALDERMEN

Charles Bossuyt

J. F. Macdonald.

Geo. Murphy

H. C. Norquay

J. I. Seabrook.

Peter Vachon

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902.

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munster Recently Deceased. In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. A. K. tagman, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count. They came by dozens into his adventurous life, and yet it was his boast—or rather his pride, for he never boasted—that he had never killed a man in a duel notwithstanding that he never was defeated in such a combat.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise. For nearly seventy years he had been one of the chief matres des armes of three continents. There is nothing of the sabbre, rapier and broadsword that he did not know. As a fencer he was noted not only for the lightning quickness of his lunge but also for the phenomenal distance he covered when extended. This quality saved his life a hundred times. He was 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighed 154 pounds.

His shoulders were broad, his chest deep, his flanks thin, his arms long and knotted with muscles. "I believe in the high guard," he said, "and I am for attack more than defense. Alexandre Dumas was a great man, but he knew little of the sword. Tales of his heroes standing with back to a wall and defeating six or eight opponents are nonsensical on their face. A swordsman, no matter what his skill, can successfully engage many men only by a display of superior activity. He must leap here and there. He must advance and retreat. He must circle and dodge and swerve like a bird in flight. His endeavor must be to engage one of his adversaries at a time and to put them out of the combat successfully. How can he do this while glued to a wall?"

His mother was a Prussian lady of title, his father a Dane of rank. His father left his military post at Santa Cruz in 1812 and came to Baltimore. There, in 1814, the son was born. When the boy was four years old his parents returned to Denmark. At eighteen he became a pupil in the establishment of Dr. Linge, inventor of the Swedish movement system and a brilliant style of sword play which is the frame upon which all modern fencing hangs.

In three years he was the most famous swordsman in Europe and recognized as the strongest man on the Continent. At twenty-two he became swordmaster to Constantine the Grand Duke, and the commanding officer of the Grand Duke's bodyguard. At twenty-three he fought his first duel with Carl Hansen, a celebrated swordsman, disarming him at the fifth pass.

Munster's adventurous disposition led him to every part of the world where armed conflict was inevitable. He fought in the Texan war of independence, and participated in scores of Cuban and South and Central American rebellions. Once in his career he led a band of fifty-four filibusters against President Guardiola, of Honduras, surnamed the Butcher. He was captured on that occasion and thrown into prison at the Butcher's command. He has told of that and his other Honduras experiences in the following words: "In a little while I was as happy as ever, the friend of all the leading

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munster Recently Deceased. In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. A. K. tagman, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count. They came by dozens into his adventurous life, and yet it was his boast—or rather his pride, for he never boasted—that he had never killed a man in a duel notwithstanding that he never was defeated in such a combat.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise. For nearly seventy years he had been one of the chief matres des armes of three continents. There is nothing of the sabbre, rapier and broadsword that he did not know. As a fencer he was noted not only for the lightning quickness of his lunge but also for the phenomenal distance he covered when extended. This quality saved his life a hundred times. He was 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighed 154 pounds.

His shoulders were broad, his chest deep, his flanks thin, his arms long and knotted with muscles. "I believe in the high guard," he said, "and I am for attack more than defense. Alexandre Dumas was a great man, but he knew little of the sword. Tales of his heroes standing with back to a wall and defeating six or eight opponents are nonsensical on their face. A swordsman, no matter what his skill, can successfully engage many men only by a display of superior activity. He must leap here and there. He must advance and retreat. He must circle and dodge and swerve like a bird in flight. His endeavor must be to engage one of his adversaries at a time and to put them out of the combat successfully. How can he do this while glued to a wall?"

His mother was a Prussian lady of title, his father a Dane of rank. His father left his military post at Santa Cruz in 1812 and came to Baltimore. There, in 1814, the son was born. When the boy was four years old his parents returned to Denmark. At eighteen he became a pupil in the establishment of Dr. Linge, inventor of the Swedish movement system and a brilliant style of sword play which is the frame upon which all modern fencing hangs.

In three years he was the most famous swordsman in Europe and recognized as the strongest man on the Continent. At twenty-two he became swordmaster to Constantine the Grand Duke, and the commanding officer of the Grand Duke's bodyguard. At twenty-three he fought his first duel with Carl Hansen, a celebrated swordsman, disarming him at the fifth pass.

Munster's adventurous disposition led him to every part of the world where armed conflict was inevitable. He fought in the Texan war of independence, and participated in scores of Cuban and South and Central American rebellions. Once in his career he led a band of fifty-four filibusters against President Guardiola, of Honduras, surnamed the Butcher. He was captured on that occasion and thrown into prison at the Butcher's command. He has told of that and his other Honduras experiences in the following words: "In a little while I was as happy as ever, the friend of all the leading

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munster Recently Deceased. In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. A. K. tagman, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count. They came by dozens into his adventurous life, and yet it was his boast—or rather his pride, for he never boasted—that he had never killed a man in a duel notwithstanding that he never was defeated in such a combat.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise. For nearly seventy years he had been one of the chief matres des armes of three continents. There is nothing of the sabbre, rapier and broadsword that he did not know. As a fencer he was noted not only for the lightning quickness of his lunge but also for the phenomenal distance he covered when extended. This quality saved his life a hundred times. He was 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighed 154 pounds.

His shoulders were broad, his chest deep, his flanks thin, his arms long and knotted with muscles. "I believe in the high guard," he said, "and I am for attack more than defense. Alexandre Dumas was a great man, but he knew little of the sword. Tales of his heroes standing with back to a wall and defeating six or eight opponents are nonsensical on their face. A swordsman, no matter what his skill, can successfully engage many men only by a display of superior activity. He must leap here and there. He must advance and retreat. He must circle and dodge and swerve like a bird in flight. His endeavor must be to engage one of his adversaries at a time and to put them out of the combat successfully. How can he do this while glued to a wall?"

His mother was a Prussian lady of title, his father a Dane of rank. His father left his military post at Santa Cruz in 1812 and came to Baltimore. There, in 1814, the son was born. When the boy was four years old his parents returned to Denmark. At eighteen he became a pupil in the establishment of Dr. Linge, inventor of the Swedish movement system and a brilliant style of sword play which is the frame upon which all modern fencing hangs.

In three years he was the most famous swordsman in Europe and recognized as the strongest man on the Continent. At twenty-two he became swordmaster to Constantine the Grand Duke, and the commanding officer of the Grand Duke's bodyguard. At twenty-three he fought his first duel with Carl Hansen, a celebrated swordsman, disarming him at the fifth pass.

Munster's adventurous disposition led him to every part of the world where armed conflict was inevitable. He fought in the Texan war of independence, and participated in scores of Cuban and South and Central American rebellions. Once in his career he led a band of fifty-four filibusters against President Guardiola, of Honduras, surnamed the Butcher. He was captured on that occasion and thrown into prison at the Butcher's command. He has told of that and his other Honduras experiences in the following words: "In a little while I was as happy as ever, the friend of all the leading

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munster Recently Deceased. In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. A. K. tagman, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count. They came by dozens into his adventurous life, and yet it was his boast—or rather his pride, for he never boasted—that he had never killed a man in a duel notwithstanding that he never was defeated in such a combat.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise. For nearly seventy years he had been one of the chief matres des armes of three continents. There is nothing of the sabbre, rapier and broadsword that he did not know. As a fencer he was noted not only for the lightning quickness of his lunge but also for the phenomenal distance he covered when extended. This quality saved his life a hundred times. He was 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighed 154 pounds.

His shoulders were broad, his chest deep, his flanks thin, his arms long and knotted with muscles. "I believe in the high guard," he said, "and I am for attack more than defense. Alexandre Dumas was a great man, but he knew little of the sword. Tales of his heroes standing with back to a wall and defeating six or eight opponents are nonsensical on their face. A swordsman, no matter what his skill, can successfully engage many men only by a display of superior activity. He must leap here and there. He must advance and retreat. He must circle and dodge and swerve like a bird in flight. His endeavor must be to engage one of his adversaries at a time and to put them out of the combat successfully. How can he do this while glued to a wall?"

His mother was a Prussian lady of title, his father a Dane of rank. His father left his military post at Santa Cruz in 1812 and came to Baltimore. There, in 1814, the son was born. When the boy was four years old his parents returned to Denmark. At eighteen he became a pupil in the establishment of Dr. Linge, inventor of the Swedish movement system and a brilliant style of sword play which is the frame upon which all modern fencing hangs.

In three years he was the most famous swordsman in Europe and recognized as the strongest man on the Continent. At twenty-two he became swordmaster to Constantine the Grand Duke, and the commanding officer of the Grand Duke's bodyguard. At twenty-three he fought his first duel with Carl Hansen, a celebrated swordsman, disarming him at the fifth pass.

Munster's adventurous disposition led him to every part of the world where armed conflict was inevitable. He fought in the Texan war of independence, and participated in scores of Cuban and South and Central American rebellions. Once in his career he led a band of fifty-four filibusters against President Guardiola, of Honduras, surnamed the Butcher. He was captured on that occasion and thrown into prison at the Butcher's command. He has told of that and his other Honduras experiences in the following words: "In a little while I was as happy as ever, the friend of all the leading

A REAL SOLDIER OF FORTUNE

Was Thomas Munster, Munster Recently Deceased. In All His Combats He Never Killed a Man, That Belong Against His Principles.

If there ever was an actual Dr. A. K. tagman, a real soldier of fortune who cut his way with the "sweet white weapon," that man was Col. Thomas Munster, who died last week in Chicago.

Not all the heroes of all the world and cloak dramas of the stage have had a title of the adventures, fights, escapades and escapes from death of the tall old man with the fiercely waxed moustache and imperial and the blood of the Hohenzollerns in his veins, whose life the last thirty years had been in sharp contrast to the turmoil of his youth.

He was principal or second in fifty-three duels, regularly arranged combats with sword, pistol or lance. The number of impromptu fights, adventures and battles he had with from one to six adversaries at a time he never was able to count. They came by dozens into his adventurous life, and yet it was his boast—or rather his pride, for he never boasted—that he had never killed a man in a duel notwithstanding that he never was defeated in such a combat.

At the time of his death he was eighty-eight years old. "He who lives by the sword lives long," was his tribute to the worth of martial exercise. For nearly seventy years he had been one of the chief matres des armes of three continents. There is nothing of the sabbre, rapier and broadsword that he did not know. As a fencer he was noted not only for the lightning quickness of his lunge but also for the phenomenal distance he covered when extended. This quality saved his life a hundred times. He was 5 feet 11 inches tall and weighed 154 pounds.

His shoulders were broad, his chest deep, his flanks thin, his arms long and knotted with muscles. "I believe in the high guard," he said, "and I am for attack more than defense. Alexandre Dumas was a great man, but he knew little of the sword. Tales of his heroes standing with back to a wall and defeating six or eight opponents are nonsensical on their face. A swordsman, no matter what his skill, can successfully engage many men only by a display of superior activity. He must leap here and there. He must advance and retreat. He must circle and dodge and swerve like a bird in flight. His endeavor must be to engage one of his adversaries at a time and to put them out of the combat successfully. How can he do this while glued to a wall?"

His mother was a Prussian lady of title, his father a Dane of rank. His father left his military post at Santa Cruz in 1812 and came to Baltimore. There, in 1814, the son was born. When the boy was four years old his parents returned to Denmark. At eighteen he became a pupil in the establishment of Dr. Linge, inventor of the Swedish movement system and a brilliant style of sword play which is the frame upon which all modern fencing hangs.

In three years he was the most famous swordsman in Europe and recognized as the strongest man on the Continent. At twenty-two he became swordmaster to Constantine the Grand Duke, and the commanding officer of the Grand Duke's bodyguard. At twenty-three he fought his first duel with Carl Hansen, a celebrated swordsman, disarming him at the fifth pass.

Munster's adventurous disposition led him to every part of the world where armed conflict was inevitable. He fought in the Texan war of independence, and participated in scores of Cuban and South and Central American rebellions. Once in his career he led a band of fifty-four filibusters against President Guardiola, of Honduras, surnamed the Butcher. He was captured on that occasion and thrown into prison at the Butcher's command. He has told of that and his other Honduras experiences in the following words: "In a little while I was as happy as ever, the friend of all the leading

AMUSEMENTS

THE AUDITORIUM. W. W. BITTNER, MANAGER. Ralph E. Cummings and Auditorium Stock Company. Current Rises Promptly at 8:30 O'Clock.

NEW SAVOY. Burlesque and Vaudeville Show. Freimuth's Orchestra. Week Commencing Monday, Feb. 3.

Pacific Packing and Navigation Co. Successors to Pacific Steam Whaling Co. Copper River and Cook's Inlet. YAKUTAT, ORCA, VALDEZ, HOMER.

Burlington Route. No matter to what point you may be destined, your ticket should read Via the Burlington. PUGET SOUND AGENT M. P. BENTON, 103 Pioneer Square, SEATTLE, WA.

The Northwestern Line. Chicago and All Eastern Points. All through trains from the North Pacific Coast connect with this line in the Union Depot at St. Paul.

The Great Northern "FLYER". LEAVES SEATTLE FOR ST. PAUL EVERY DAY AT 8:00 P. M. A Solid Vestibule Train With All Modern Equipments.

Regina Hotel. J. W. Wilson, Prop. and Mgr. Dawson's Leading Hotel. America and European Plan. Cuisine Unexcelled. Newly Re-fitted Throughout—All Modern Improvements. Rooms and board by the day, week or month.

HICKS & THOMPSON. PROPRIETORS. FLANNERY HOTEL. First Class Accommodations. Warm, Comfortable and Fully Furnished Rooms. Wholesome, Well Cooked Meals.

Alaska Steamship Co. Operating the Steamers. "Dolphin", "Farallon", "Dirigo". For All Points in Southeastern Alaska. Connecting with the White Pass & Yukon Railroad for Dawson and interior Yukon points.

HENRY C. MACAULAY.

AMUSEMENTS THIS WEEK.

Auditorium Theatre—"Lady Windermere's Fan." New Savoy—Burlesque and Vaudeville.

A. B. Hall—Choral Concert Friday night.

THE TICKETS.

The qualified electors of Dawson will go to the polls tomorrow for the purpose of selecting a mayor and six aldermen who will be charged with the duty of organizing the new town government, under the provisions of the incorporation charter.

The merits of the two candidates have been thoroughly discussed in the press of the city during the past two weeks and their attitude upon the various questions of public concern is well understood.

Throughout the campaign the Nugget has championed the cause of Mr. Macaulay for the reason that with him and his associates on the ticket we feel perfectly convinced that the many interests of the city will be perfectly safe. The task of setting in proper running order the machinery of the various departments of the public service will call for peculiar qualifications on the part of the men who will be entrusted with that responsibility.

These qualifications are represented in Mr. Macaulay and the gentlemen on his aldermanic board in every particular. The candidates are all business men who have been selected for their various positions with a special view to their fitness therefor. Their appeal is to the intelligent, sober-minded electors of the community who are interested in seeing the affairs of the city conducted on business lines and who appreciate the efforts of professional agi-

We fit glasses. Pioneer drug store.

Bargains in Skirts. Tweed Skirts $5.00. Sateen Underskirts $3.00 Each. J. P. McLENNAN. 233 FRONT STREET.

ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL COMPANY. Standard Cigars and Tobacco, Wholesale and Retail At Right Prices.

ESTABLISHED 1860. ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL COMPANY. Standard Cigars and Tobacco, Wholesale and Retail At Right Prices.

ESTABLISHED 1860. ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL COMPANY. Standard Cigars and Tobacco, Wholesale and Retail At Right Prices.

ESTABLISHED 1860. ANGLO-AMERICAN COMMERCIAL COMPANY. Standard Cigars and Tobacco, Wholesale and Retail At Right Prices.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1902. At the airy office... been passed... the morning... the weary... with relish... trary push... gloomy... became good... Well, St... quiringly... "Oh, I... abominable... keep I can't... er touch... the men, w... the Engle... are with t... in the mot... played not... "Play in... the person... dare to sa... for uncer... "Herman... economical... Tomsy... quite unde... the Counte... "Why?"... "I can't... mother ne... "I don't... in the fa... fuses? T... mov... "Have yo... "No."... "Well, th... with six... mother we... all the fac... other in th... to be the... was called... of fare... while play... means, she... told her b... returned ou... could indu... on the sub... at her w... membered... Saint-Germ... of him, as... have been... to have di... the philos... other equal... had money... grandmother... a note at... her. He... found her... painted the... the darkest... ing the Co... his friend... "I could... the C... thoughtfu... would not... if you h... only add... There is a... self."... "But I... sited my... "There... len to me... "The Co... which any... deal to kn... The young... Tom... few whiffs... "The next... peared at... quiting-to... was the... some exas... my money... show three... and again... Was soon... "A fable... haps the c... "I hardly... sky, with... "So you... knows the... haven't fr... "I must... four son... er: all of... the never... them. He... much on... litary, wh... ing expand... five at pl... thousand r... and grand... the told h... bin swear... He returne... thousand... came out... "What... "As day... break" up... and taking... "The Com... would bet... leg-room... sitting... Constant... performance... along to a... and spent... as she had... At the v... Ward, su... Good... read a y... entered the... a favor... "What... "I want... son of my... for the... "I'm a... "After a...