THE STAR!

Ragged, and Torne, and True.

AN OLD BALLAD.

I am a poore man, God knows.

And all my neight ours can tell. I want both money and clothes, And yet I live wondrous well: I have a contented m nd, And a harte to beare out all, Though fortune (being unkin 1) Hath given mesubstance small, Then hang up sorrow and care. It never shall make me rue; What though my backe goes hare, "I me ragged, and torne, and true,"

I scorn to live by the shift, Or 1 y any sinister dealing; Ile flatter no man for a gi.t, Nor will I get money i y stealing; Ile be no knight of the post To sell my soule for a tribe, Though all my fortunes be crost, Yet I sco.n the cheaters t ibe. Then hang up soriow and care, It never shall make me rue; What though my cloak be thread hare; "I'm lagged, and toine, and true."

A boote af Spanish leather I've seen set faste in the stockes. Exposed to wind and weather. And foul reproach and mocks, While I in my poore ragges Can pass at liberty still: O, fie on these brawling bragges. When money is gotten so ill! O, te on these pilfering knaves! I scorn to be of their crue. The steal to make themselves brave; "I'm ragged, and torne, and true."

I've seen a gallant go by With all his wealth on his backe. He look't as lof ily As one that did nothing lacke; And yet he hath no meanes But what he gets by the sword. O, fie on these high way thieves! The gallows will be their due: Though my doublet be rent i' th sleeves, "I'm ragged, and torne, and true."

'Tis good to be honest and just, Though a man be ever so poore; False dealers are still in mistrust,

O Louis, Louis! I cannot let you | none of the Hartly's could stoop to wed were open now; a counter was placed Suddenly his quick eye caught sight of go! she murmured, in heart-broken ac- with poverty in any form.

cents, The girl made no reply to the last re- and a variety of other articles. A girl the book, and, again turning the leaves, The undertaker now came forward, mark of the old man. only drew her veil stood behind the counter; she respond- this time hastily, he found a folded paand, gently raising her, he said in a soft, closer to her face, and leaned her head ed civily to John's salutation of "A fine per which had before remained unnosoothing voice,back wearily against the cushions of the day, miss," but she eyed him closely, ticed. It was not sealed, but simply Don't, my dear child, don't take on so! carriage.

The hearse had by this time turned she knew that he came from the great weary, and laid it away for a time. Try and think it is for the best. into a winding road that led to the co- house on the hill, and she knew, too. Richard opened the paper and glanc-But even as he spoke, she broke forth again in piteous sobs. Are you going to the grave ? he at last slowly followed after, until they came to place that afternoon.

inquired. That is, he said, in a hesi- the family lot of the Hartlys, where tating tone, if you are able to bear it. reposed the remains of Mr. Hartly, and sweet; and I guees you had better been a gloom over me to-day that I can-voice.

he said, glancing over the list of names their carriage, John stepped quietly out, on the paper he held in his hand.

almost inaudibly.

grief as the lid was finally closed, sank her.

said, kindly and respectfully, they have grave, where was to repose the form of forgotten to write your name here; but him who was loved so fondly; but where if you would be willing to sit in the after bidding him a last farewell forever carriage with John and Martha, the two on this earth, and the clods rattled old servants of the family, I think you harshly as they fell on the coffin, Richmight go. I see no other way, as the ard Hartly stepped back, and. kneeling other carriages are filled, he said, de- down by his brother's grave, he gave precatingly, fearing least her pride might way to his grief, while Grace and her be offended. But little had he to fear from the by sympathizing friends. poor young creature, who seemed com.

pletely overwhelmed by her sorrow.

And, resting her little gloved hand on of the old couple, while the young girl the strong and sturdy arm so kindly of- stood with both hands pressed over her cake. fered her, she moved out to the hall, heart, as if to keep it from breaking down the long flight of steps, and down 'neath its weight of sorrow. the gravelled walk that led from the mansion, and into the carriage where were getting late, and I think we had better already seated John and Martha, the go.

Yes, yes! she answered, in a choked father of Louis, and Lucy, his sister, who had died in her infancy. Let me see ; what is your mame, miss? When the driver opened the door of and after assisting Martha to alight, Mabel Vane, answered the sweet voice turned to Mabel, and extended his rough.

The name is not here. I wonder who to rise but sank back on the seat from she can be? Some poor cousin, per sheer weakness; but by a great effort haps, whom they have forgotten. Poor she rose again. and stepped out, leaning creature! how deeply she grieves! on the arm of each, which they, seeing thought he, as Mabel, overcome with how weak she was, had kindly offered said at first, drink some of this nice of her who is my wife that unman's me once more to the floor. Miss Vane, he Solemnly they gathered around the mother were led away to their carriages

At last Richard, too, turned away, and only John, Martha and Mabel, re-Any place-any place ! she moaned. mained ; tears flowed down the cheeks Come, miss, said the old man, it is two old and faithful servants of the The girl did not answer him, but fell Hartly family, who had watched over forward in a deep swoon on the newly the children of their mistress from their made grave, her face buried in the clay childhood. They raised her tenderly between them

A cup of tea, miss, and make it strong and fresh.

middle-aged woman, who sat at one of standing on the blink of the world, and

Mabel and Martha. ting, in her pity. to call her miss, as she er, I am married, and it is the thought feel much better.

she drank slowly.

little hand.

miss?

She shook her head sadly.

No. I believe it would choke me. Well. try and drink a little more tea, raising the cup again to her lips.

She obeyed passively, and John took away the empty cup and untasted

Mrs. Hartly will wonder at our absence, said John; but then, I think, we had better wait and see this poor child safe on the train. Martha nodded her head assentingly. There are plenty there to see to things, and she really needs our care.

They waited there until the whistle

a broken voice for her kindness.

She took her arms from around Martha's, neck and, taking John's hand, with childlike simplicity bestowed a grateful kiss upon his sunburnt check.

The train had now stopped, and,

bidding Martha a last good-by, she al-

by John, who found her a seat, and.

after whispering a few words to the con-

Mabel looked back as the train moved out of the depot, and saw her two friends waving their handkerchiefs until she was carried from their view.

she must have fallen asleep, for snddenly she felt a great shock, saw a confusion of lights, heard screams and crics of agony, and felt that she was going down, down, down, and could not

This is death she thought, and I shall meet Louis. And she knew no more.

Chapter II.

The morning rose elear and beauti-

Richard walked to and fro through will see to her, hurried from the car.

stranger to you.

check herself.

metery of Millbrook ; and the carriages that Louis Hartly's funeral had taken ed at the writing ; it was his brother's, and ran thus :--MY DEAR BROTHER RICHARD :- there has give me some cake-some that is nice not account for; it seems as if I could feel the shadow of the dark angels wing. The girl noded, and, turning to a I have a strange presentiment that 1 am in front, filled with confectionery, fruit, something white among the leaves of wondering why he should be there, for folded, as if the writer had become that my soul may soon be launched on the the tables in the small refreshment broad sea of eternity; there is a strange room, repeated John's request. Very oppression on my pirits to-night, and Imost inaudibly. Mabel Vane, repeated the gentleman. but honest, hand. The child, for she was scarcely more than a child, essayed but honest, hand. The child, for she cles; John took the tray from her and to you. It may he only a morbid fancy, hastened to the room where he had left and perhaps in a few days 1 may look upon this and smile at what I have writ. My dear child, said Martha, forget- ten; but some power I cannot resist I ids me write, and I mu t obey. Dear broth.

> tea; it will refresh you and make you when I feel that death is near. You will wonder why I never told my mother, or Mabel raised her head wearily, and you, of my marriage, but will not be sur-Martha held the cup to her lips, while prised when I tell you that Matel was on ya poor governess when I married he. But she is pure and gool, and as I cannot drink any more, she said, well bred as our own dear little sister, pushing the cup away gently with her Grace. And perhaps some day. my brother, you muy learn to love her, and Will you not try and eat something, then-well let the future take care of it. self. You will fin I her address in my private desk, and O Richard I find her and be kind to her, for the sake of your biother whose heart may be stilled for.

ever long ere you read this. Your affectionate bother. LOUIS HARTLY.

The letter fell from Richard's hands. Married ! he exclaimed, looking a. round in a bewildered way, as if expecting to see some one who could or would explain more.

Once more he raised the paper. Poor Louis! he said. He felt and knew what we none of us suspectedthat he would soon cross the Dark

S. 5 12 19 26 JAMI ENC

> Pictur Glass

221

One do

materia

No.

St. Jo

BRE

Just H

Fresh

Strawl

Bramb

Syrı

A

C F

W. Ros

Sept. 17.

BOOK

E. W

Importe

HA

Spic

Th'are af aid of the officers doore; There conscience doth them acuse, And they quake at the noise of a bush, While he that doth no man abuse For the law needs not care a rush. Then welfare to the man that can say, I pay every man his due;

Although I go poor in array, "I'm agged, and torne, and true."

June was in all her glory; and yet the binds of the Hartly mansion were closed the bright day on which my story opens, and from the handle of the heavy oaken door floated the sombre token of sorrow that proclaimed the death of one of its inmates.

Already the carriages were moving slowly nearer the door; while the hearse, with its stately plumes and heavy drapery, stood a short distance off, waiting to bear to its final resting-place the noble. youthful form of Louis Hartly, youngest son of the proud, haughty woman, who, bowed with grief, now sat within the desolate mansion.

Already the mourning relatives and friends were gathered in the lofty parlors, and the white-haired pastor, who had known Louis Hartly from his boyhood, alluded touchingly to the youth now lying there so cold and still. There was a scand of weeping, and many a hushed sob was heard through the room, for he was loved by all who knew him for his sunny smile and pleasant words, the woman ceased speaking, and even showered on rich and poor alike; be- old John found occasion to wipe away sides, his whole-hearted generosity, his the tears that were streaming down his affable manner and true goodness, made furrowed cheeks. him a favorite with all.

The last prayer was said, the last ed Mabel of Martha. kisses given, the last farewell spoken in broken voices; slowly and sadly they prise. No, miss, he was but a boy; why turned away from the casket which held ne would not be twenty for three months all that was mortal of the son, brother to come. Married! No, indeed. and friend. How beautiful he looked, there was a young lady whom my misas he lay there in death ! His dark hair tress was determined, he. or his brother lay in clustering masses, o'er his mar Richard, should marry. She is as handbie brow, and the white lids were closed for ever over the violet eyes, that were never again to return the glance of love heard of her; it is Miss Violet Leigh. and affection as of old. The well-cut You know her father, Mr. John Leigh, lips were slightly parted in a faint smile, is the great banker; and my mistress is and over the whole face was the shadow of peace, which is not of this world.

she and her husband would walk to the length, tired of this, he walked out Slowly Mrs. Hartly moved from the toop to marry any one who is not beau-Water Street, Harbor Grace, Newfound room, leaning on the arm of Richard, iful and wealthy, like Miss Violet. through the hall, and up the richly car. house. land. John carried Mabel into the little peted stairs, intending to go to his own her only remaining son, while by her Is she, then, so very proud? queried waiting room, and put her down on one room; to do this, he was obliged to pass Price of Subscription-THREE DOLLARS DO side walked Grace Hartly, a beautiful side walked Grace Hartly, a beautiful girl of fifteen summers. After they had left the room, and as the lid of the cas-the cld housekeeper. If Louis had the exception of a small looking-glass, partment of Louis. Mechanically he annum, payable half-yearly. Advertisements inserted on the most liberalterms, viz. :- Per square of sevennarried a poor girl, would she not have comprised the furniture of the room. turned the knob and entered; the room ket was about to be closed there came teen lines, for first insertion, $1; each welcomed her to her heart, if she were He was joined by Martha, who gently was darkened, and the furniture requickly from a distant part of the room continuation 25 cents. good, and pure, for her son's sake-If removed Mabel's bonnet and shawl; the mained the same as it was on that fatal Book and Job Printing executed in a a young girl clad in deep mourning, who her only crime was poverty? she asked, latter she used as a pillow, folding day when Richard had entered and sprang forward, crying,manner calculated to afford the utraces n eloquent, pleading tones. and placing it on one of the arms of the found his brother sitting there so cold Oh! do not close it yet! Let me see satisfaction. Poverty, in that case, said John, is a settee. him once more, or my heart will break ! and lifeless AGENTS. The sad looking undertaker moved A handsomely bound Bible lay on the rime my mistress oould not forgive; The young girl, conscious but mo-aside, and the, girl leaned over the face does my mistress consider it so generally, or she is kind and good to us, and to Uher servants; but for one of my oung masters to stoop to wed with pov-tw that she could not forgive her and smaller room a few store in but with thoughts of the two that she could not forgive her and smaller room a few store but was therein but with thoughts of the two that she could not forgive her and smaller room a few store but was therein but with thoughts of the two that she could not forgive her and smaller room a few store but was therein but with thoughts of the two that she could not forgive her and smaller room a few store but with thoughts of the of the dead, pressing wild, passionate kisses on the brow, closed eyes, lips and on the murble hand of the young man. Suddenly her strength gave way, and ty-that she could not forgive ! And another, and smaller, reom, a few steps was therein, but with thoughts of the Sr. PIERRE, Miquelon " H. J. Wattsshe sank, moaning and weeping, to the ie all man shook his head as if to say away. It had long windows, which church-yard where Louis was lying. Catalina...... " J. Edgecombe.

They looked wonderingly as Mr. and bore her to the carriage. Boynton assisted Mabel into the carrithe seat, he closed the door and walked back to the house. The girl sat motionless, with both hands covering her face.

tery After a short time she looked up. in the carriage. beseechingly.-

did he die?

chief somewhere from the ample folds of face of childlike beauty which gave proonce or twice, said,-

Did you not know that master Louis lied suddenly three days ago? Heart lisease, the doctors said ; Master Richard went to his room and found him sit ting in his chair, with an open Bible before him; he was lying back in his chair, one hand lying on the good book, and he other pressed against his side. Maser Richard thought, at first, that he was asleep; but when he found he could not wake him, and when he was so cold and white, he knew something was wrong; he ran to call the mistress, and when she and Miss Grace went to the room, they saw that he was dead. O my dear young master Louis! cried the woman, bursting into tears. What will my mistress, and young Miss Grace, and gone ?

Married ! exclaimed Martha, in sur- us. But ome as a picture. and they say she has leaps of money; perhaps you have so proud that it would break her heart f either of the young masters should

Poor young thing! said Martha. age, and, as she sank, half fainting, on Poor young thing! Who can she be? They liited her in, and Martha, sitting beside her, raised her head and let it rest on her shoulder, and, while supuntil the carriages moved down the hill, porting her with one hand, fanned her taking the road that led to the ceme- gently with a fan which chanced to be and, meeting the sympathizing gaze of John quietly let down the window. old Martha, she leaned forward, and, and, with a careful hand, drew aside the taking the old servant by the hand, said, heavy veil, and then lifted it clear back from the face, disclosing all the grace Tell me of his death ! when and where and beauty of her features. She could not have num! erod more than sixteen Old Martha took a snowy handker- or perhaps seventeen years; with a her dress, and, after wiping her eyes mise of a glorious womanhood; her beautiful brown hair hung in heavy curls beneath her bonnet, and the lashes ductor, who responded, all right; I which now lay on her pale cheeks were long and curling and of tha same color as the hair, that now hung in dishevelled curls over her pure, innocent brow.

As they once more neared the mansion the girl unclosed her eyes, showing them to be a beautiful, clear brown, which might, in happiness, sparkle and dance with mischief, although now bathed in tears.

When we get back to the house, you must lie down and rest, Martha said, bending over her in a caressing way.

Mabel shuddere I visibly. Back to the house? Oh, no! I can nct go there! She is so proud! And if she should scorn, and refuse to believe laster Richard, do, now that you are me, it would kill me. I cannot go ful; the sun shone in golden splendor there; please let me get out; or else the birds sang their swertest songs. The ask the driver to take me to the depot. air was fragrant with the perfumes of killed !

The young girl sobbed violently as [will not have to wait a great while roses on this bright June morningfor a train to take me back. My child, said John, you are not fit year.

to travel; you need rest and refresh- It was the day after the burial of There was a young lady in the carment. My Mistress may be proud, but Louis Hartly, and, in the mansion. riage with us yesterday, and she seemed Was he married ? hesitatingly inquir she is kind-hearted and good, and she there was that quiet air of sadness and to take Master Louis's death very hard.

> a loved one. Martha. too, joined with her husband Mrs. Hartly had not come down much trouble, that my heart ached for in urging her to go back with them; stairs, this morning; she breakfasted in her, Master Richard, answered Marth ... but Mable's distress appeared so great her own, apartments, while Grace, who that they finally complied with her re- felt keenly her brother's loss, wandered quest, and John spoke to the driver, and up and down the handsome garden, in a sad and listless way that was touching told him to drive to the station. to behold.

In a short time the carriage stopped before the little station; the driver opened the door, and held it while John lift- the breakfast-room, alternately glancing ed Mabel out, for she did not seem to through the window at Grace, and at Is printed and published by the Proprise have strength to stand or walk. Mar- the blue sky above, where he firmly betha then told the man he might go as lieved the spirit of his brother to be. At

River which flows through the vale of of the engine warned them of the ap-Eternity. proach of the train, and then walked

He rested his head thoughfully on out to the platform. As the train came his hand, for a moment, and then, risin sight Mabel turned, and throwing ing, walked from the room to his own her arms around Martha's neck, kissed chamber, and, pulling the bell-cord. her twice or thrice, and thanked her in summoned John, the old man who had been so kind to Mahel. Some time, she said, you may know

Teil Sarah to inform my mother, he who I am, and then you will neither of said, that I must go away for a day or you regret the kindness you have shown two, on important business, and bring to the young girl who is now but a me the morning paper.

> John went down stairs, and soon returned with the paper and passed it to Richard. The young man glanced at it, when something mot his eye that caused him to start.

Horrible railroad accident, he read, aloud. The train from New York ran lowed herself to be assisted into the car off the track near H----, last night, and a large number of the passengers were killed or injured. And it went on to give the full particulars.

> But he did not read on, for an exclamation from John startled him, and, looking up from the paper, he saw that the old man was pale, and stood gazing at him in a frightful manner.

How long she sat there she kuew not Why, what is it, John? Are you ill? What ails you?

The old servant did not answer, but stood with the same frightened look upon his face. Martha was passing by the door, and Richard called to her and said-

Come here, and see if you can tell what it is that ails your husband.

But John had by this time found his voice and said to his master,-

The young lady, sir, was in that train. She is dead! Oh! I know she has been

What young lady does he mean ? ask-June one of the lovliest months of the ed Richard, directing the question to Martha.

would be glad to have you return with gloom which prevails after the death of Pcor thing ! She was very young, and so handsome, and seemed to be in so

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

AND CONCEPTION BAY SEMI-WEEKLY ADVERTISER, tors, ALEXANDER A. PARSONS and WIL-LIAM R. SQUAREY, at their Office, (op. posite the premises of Capt. D. Green

Constantly School a Prayer a nomin Music, C French Concert Albums Tissue a A large

NE

Lately app PRINTL

Also, Ager

A large sel

JEWELEI

May 14,

CLOC.

turing J