Four tons to the acre is a common yield for hay. Richard Holyoke, formerly of Ernest Belyea Kingsclear, now a wealthy property owner "Sewing Circle" of Seattle and a bank president, told me that his farm has yielded him five tons of Miss Annie Johnson hay to the acre and there is plenty of just as good land in the valleys I have spoken of. Right behind the city, or rather right in the city, for houses are built upon its slopes, "Egyptian Flower Girl" is a hill which contains an excellent coal mine, to work which a company has been organized. This is one of the arguments. The commerce of the Pacific Coast will require coaling stations. These the Sound ports now afford; but they involve a sail through land locked waters and an outlay for pilotage, and in the case of sailing vessels, for towing. moved so long, you are asking too much. The harbor at South Bend is out on the open ocean and vessels can sail directly into it without either tug or pilot. The Puget Sound ports are already beginning to anticipate the advantages they will derive from their proximity to the coal fields, after the construction of the Nicaraguan canal. A great increase in the tonnage on the Pacific is expected to follow the completion of this work, and the Sound ports hope to become coaling stations of immense importance South Bend points out that it is as near the coal fields as they, and at least two days' sail nearer the ordinary track of trans-Pacific steamers. The same advantage in point of distance is claimed in regard to the lumber trade with Central and South America and
