

Phases of Presidential Campaign.

The lines on which the Presidential campaign in the United States are to be fought are now fairly clear. No "freak" or dissident candidates that may be nominated are likely to develop strength that will divert the contest into other than a straight old-fashioned fight between Republican and Democrat. The Socialists will no doubt support their old comrade, Convict Eugene V. Debs of Atlanta penitentiary; the anarchists may have a choice specimen to cheer for in William Randolph Hearst. The plain citizen, who far outnumbered both factions, will make his choice between Harding and Cox.

Never in any Presidential contest has the issue of battle lain between two candidates so nearly similar in antecedents, environment, and human experience. Both are Ohio men of clean frugal up-bringing; good family men; excellent platform speakers noted for warmth rather than brilliance; newspaper proprietors of the smaller-town type who learn much by human contact; excellent examples for the average American. Neither would make a bad President, neither a sensational or dazzling one. In the circumstances, it being a "Republican year," the odds favor Mr. Harding. It happens that so far as domestic issues are concerned, there is little to choose between the Republican and Democratic platforms. The delegates to the National conventions were careful to adopt moderate courses and to avoid pronouncements likely to develop extreme cleavages.

So far as international questions are concerned, it is plain that, though the Republicans are likely to get the most votes, the Democrats have the best arguments. By far the loftiest and most enlightened utterance delivered in either the Republican or Democratic conventions was the "keynote" delivered of Hon. Homer Cummings in opening the latter assembly at San Francisco. It elucidated the responsibility of the American people toward the rest of the world, in these days when Europe is lying prostrate, in terms that made the opening speech of Henry Cabot Lodge at the Republican convention in Chicago seem playmate and provincial. Mr. Cummings also earned the good wishes of Canadians for Democratic success by his defence of this country's right to be a member of the League of Nations. Canada is and shall remain a member of that League, whether the United States stays out or comes in, but most of us would rather have the cordial approval of our great neighbor than otherwise. Probably when the Presidential campaign reaches its final stages Governor Cox will find his declaration in favor of the ratification of the Peace Treaty without reservations a valuable asset. Signs are not lacking that countless Americans hold that view.

There are one or two minor factors in connection with the campaign that are unique. In each instance the candidates for the Vice-Presidency are regarded as of higher calibre than the Presidential choices. There are those who scoff at the abilities of Senator Harding, but few who do not regard his running mate, Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts, as a strong selection. Others are inclined to view Governor Cox as of a somewhat superficial type, but everyone regards his associate, Franklin Roosevelt, as one of the ablest public servants in the United States. Another unique circumstance is the fact that whatever happens, a newspaper editor will be the next President for the first time in the history of that country. In the past newspaper men have made and unmade Presidents, but have never captured the honor for themselves. The present certainty that signal honor will fall to journalism does not really mean very much; the average of intelligence among newspaper men is neither lower nor higher than in other professions. But all newspaper men of standing have one asset, the lack of which has been a grievous disability to Woodrow Wilson. Through the contacts of their daily experience they acquire a knowledge of human nature that enables them to work with others, and to accomplish their aims in a spirit of co-operation and mutual respect. The absence of such intuitions in the occupant of the White House has prevented the fulfilment of his very noble ideals.—Saturday Night.

The following amusing incident occurred at a hairdresser's in a small town in Lancashire:

Customer: Well, Shears, what did you think of the bishop's sermon Sunday? I saw you in church.

Barber: Yes, sir, I was there; but, to tell the truth, there was a man sat in front of me whose hair wanted cutting so badly that I couldn't hear a word.
