The Most Tragic
Trek in History

TORONTO, Nov. 8.—(By Canadian Press)—"Giving one's general impression first, I can simply say that the half has not been told of this colossal tragedy,—and the other half cannot be told," says Frank Yeigh, Canadian representative of the British Save the Children Fund, after a visit of inspection to the Greek Refugee Camps in the Near East. These camps were organized for the shelter and feeding of part of the 4,000,000 people forced out of Asia Minor by Turkey during the last three years under what Mr. Yeigh describes as "the harsh and cruel conditions of the Turkey of Lusanne." Mr. Yeigh says that the Canadian donors through the Save the Children Fund be assured that the aid they have thus far given has not only met the direst of human needs, but has been the means of saving thousands of child lives; that a residue of 300,000 still call for help, for another season at least, and that the Fund is administering its gifts most conscientiously and economically, in fact, "in the British way," as an on-looker put it.

Mr. Yeigh continues: "It is only fair to state that the refugee adults are gradually being helped to self-support, through the $50,000,000 loan arranged by the League of Nations, but not a cent of this has been, or can be used for food or clothing,—only for land, housing, implements, livestock and seed grain. This leaves the multitude of helpless women and children at the mercy of the world philanthropy; which, however, is only partially being met. This same world so generous in its philanthropic impulse, so soon grows tired of helping, forgetting that hunger returns to children and grown-ups too, every day.

AWAITING DOLES OF FOOD.
"Canada has never seen long queues of hungry, ragged and practically homeless people shivering and patiently waiting for the life-giving and life-sustaining dole, and he who could look into the seared and scared faces of these innocent victims of a post-war condition without being deeply stirred, would be unresponsive to any human need. And then to watch the changed countenances as the squares of bread and the tins and bowls of soup were carried away, to be speedily eaten in barrack or tent or mud hut, was to get a satisfactory answer to the cynical question one sometimes hears: 'Is it worth while?'"

"It will not attempt to describe in detail each camp in Salonica, though each has its own character and situation. I was specially interested in the old Canadian Hospital Barracks, spreading their homely roofs over the hot sloping hillside. They are still crowded with hundreds of needy creatures, living—in that word can be used—unbearable conditions. When one counted over twenty families in one barrack, and saw the partitions of old blankets and rugs and even tin wash basins enclosing squares of only a few feet, as the 'home' of a family, and multiplied these by all the other tumble-down structures, something of the sum total of human misery in this one camp, may be estimated. No wonder one saw two men carrying a pallet out of the camp—merely two more dead on the same mattress being hurried to the little cemetery across the road from the military city of the dead, only two more refugees, who will need no more food, or rags to clothe them."

"Rags! rags and tatters! Here one discovered their clothing value, not only in coats of many faded colors, but ill-fitting garments of variegated patches. It was one thing to see the refugees under a hot summer sun, but what of the penetrating fall and winter winds that are already sweeping down the valley of the Vardeer, chilling the floor-sleepers to the bone, and, no doubt, in many cases, to the death. 'None knows how they live through it,' was the comment of an observer. An old Greek in one of the camps, when he saw the Union Jack flying over the kitchen, exclaimed, 'I thank God every time I see it'; and another one said, 'God must have sent you to help us.'"

WORSE THAN ANIMAL CONDITIONS.
"The Lembeh camp looked the essence of unattractiveness on this hot and dusty day; the mud houses received a fresh sun-bake, and the tents suggested the sweating topees of the Canadian Indians. And yet hundreds of these Asia Minor refugees have lived for months, and even years, under these distressful conditions—worse than any animal on a Canadian farm experiences. Three children were found cuddling close to a pig for sleeping warmth. That could never happen in Canada."

"One was shown some of the new villas built by the aid of the League of Nations Refugee Settlement Commission, and comfortable little homes they are, palace compared to the hovels first used, and in proportion as the refugees are removed to them, will their housing needs be met. But great numbers still await this improvement; the process is necessarily slow in the face of the overwhelming mass suddenly precipitated into Greece, herself a relatively poor and small country."

"I next went to the mountain region of Macedonia. The news of a food distribution at Sorovitch had spread over night with mysterious speed through the refugee settlement, and by daylight the first streams appeared—mostly on foot; fewer on donkeys (three children on the back of one), and fewer still piled in carts drawn by diminutive ponies, in striking contrast to the camel caravan that had just arrived, one of the means of transportation used by The Save the Children Fund in distributing its dry rations over a wide stretch of hill country to a hundred villages.

"The little town was crowded as on a market day, and one had an opportunity of seeing refugees in the mass, for hundreds more came than could be given tickets for the cloth distribution. Once more, it was a ragged army, even worse, if that were possible than Salonica, and the pleas for help further emphasized the desolate and heavy dry rye bread, with perhaps a bit of fruit, their hunger need was equally obvious. I shall not soon forget their homeward trek later in the day—"Homeward" to what? The story of Salonica is repeated in Sorovitch, with even greater emphasis, for these refugees, scattered among the bleak and bare looking hills of Macedonia, dwell in even more wretched hovels and are more apt to be forgotten than the dwellers in or near a city.

AROUND THE GREEK CAPITAL.
"Next on to Athens. Although the Fund has recently been compelled to close its kitchen work here, the need, though diminished, would seek to still exist. The Argemion village, within the city limits, presented in some respects the most dreadful housing and living conditions of any, especially as to the crowded huts, hovels and tents on earthen walls. Swarms of dark-eyed children thronged the narrow lane of a street, with open sewer ditches that made the motor car ride a disturbing adventure. Wee little shops abounded, but who buys? One wonders. Everyone appeared to be busy, weaving and embroidery by the women, and various handicrafts by the men."

"I was also conducted to the two camps at Piraeus. The one occupying an old factory presented the usual sordid scenes, and old women followed us, asking for food. The dust and debris of the courtyard was bad enough, but what it must be under mud conditions after a rain had better be left undescribed. Finally, the climax of distressing sights was that of the old theatre in Athens, with families crowded into every box, on the stair landing and in the pit. One glimpse of the interior was enough, and I fled.

GRATEFUL TO CANADA.
"I had an interview with the Governor General of Salonica, an appointee of the present Government, who expressed his deep thanks for Canadian philanthropy. 'Greece is a poor country,' he added, 'and could never have met the burden of the refugees without the help of other countries.' And he asked for continued assistance."

"The ex-minister of Public Assistance of Refugees, and President of the Patriotic Committee of Relief in Greece, Dr. Apostolos Doxidias, gave me the following letter, as literally translated:—

"On the occasion of our acquaintance I feel it is my duty to express the gratitude of the Greek people for the great support which Canada has offered to our country through The Save the Children Fund, of which the worthy representative Messrs. Kennedy, Pernie and Sams have done their utmost to protect in the critical moments the suffering masses of refugees. I warmly beg you to greet the Canadian people and announce to them that the philanthropic work shown towards us has deeply impressed in our hearts the feeling of gratefulness and the name of Canada became dear and respectful to all Greece."

"I take courage to add that even to-day the struggle did not finish, and after the great difficulties which have been more or less settled, it remains the struggle for the Protection of the Child which has been undertaken by all its efforts by the Patriotic Committee of Relief, of which I have the honor to be the President, the means of which are unfortunately insufficient for all this work."

"The visit to Dr. McPhall's Children's Hospital in Belgrave, the capital of Jugoslavina, visualized the wide scope and international character of The Save the Children Fund from a new angle. To see the fifty cots filled with as many helpless ones, receiving aid from this beneficent institution, was not only to admire the work of Dr. McPhall and her staff, but to rejoice that the S.C.F. is contribution to its maintenance. No less striking was the attendance of outdoor patients, illustrating that phase of this excellent curative service."

Here again the need was self-evident on the part of crowds of poor people, some of whom had come from long distances. The Jugoslavina government is gradually increasing its support, realizing the value of the hospital, not alone as a temple of healing, but as an example to that and other countries. The constructive side of such a philanthropy is one of the encouraging features of the S.C.F. policy."

"The work among the babies and little folks in other institutions struck me most favorably. Here again, the sight of so many helpless little ones receiving the tenderest care was a heartening one. The world is not growing worse when such sights can be seen. And in this and every phase of unselfish service represented in the various activities above outlined, there is a true internationalism—a real contribution to present and future peace, and a practical demonstra-
