WHOLESALE LEAGUE GAMES.

PART I.-CHAPTER I. That "fine feathers make fine birds"
so self-evident an adage as to admit of no dispute by the most argumentative of cavillers; but that fine feathers make happy birds is a different story altogether, and one which will bear a considerable amount of discussion pro

Up two pair of stairs in vonder large London house poised over a box of fragrant mignonette, and commanding the comparatively extensive view of the square gardens, hangs a shining gilt birdcage, with bath and sanded floor complete, perches for exercise, trays for hempseed and other delicacies, a graceful festooning of groundsel, and a lump of white sugar between the bars. Prison, forsooth! it's a palace; and would its inmate, that bright yellow canary-bird, sing so loudly, think you, if she wasn't happy? Don't we know that the bravest voice and the noisiest laugh are unerring indicators of heart's-ease and content?
At least, the world is well satisfied to take them as such; and surely plenty of birdseed, and sand, and groundsel, and white sugar, are an equivalent for hempseed and other delicacies, a graceand white sugar, are an equivalent for that imaginary blessing which men term liberty. Tis a sad heart that "sighs for the wings of a dove"; the canary don't want any wings, she has no use even want any wings, she has no use even for her own glossy yellow pair; and for liberty, why, she wouldn't know what to do with it if she had it. The only on a day like this, when the May sunthine bursts forth into somewhat of summer warmth, when the tender green leaves, as yet unsmirched by London moke, quiver in the breath of spring, and the fleecy clouds dance against the blue sky over Beigrave Square, that the cage looks a little narrow and confined, that the vagrant life of yonder dirty sparrow appears somewhat enviable. It hust be joyful to be free to perch on the area railings, or to sip from the muddy kennel, and twitter away at will over chimney and housetop, into the fraover chimney and housetop, into the fra grant hedgerows and sunny fields of the pleasant country. But then he is but a common sparrow, after all, while she is a delleate canary—noblesse oblige, indeed, in many more ways than one. What thinks her high-born mistress, what thinks her high-born mistress, the Lady Gertrude, an earl's sister and a sovereign's god-child? With the wholesome fear of Burke and Debrett before my eyes, I suppress the proper name of the noble maiden. Shall I involve myself in an action for libel at the suit of a distinguished family? Shall I pander to the morbid taste of that numerous and respectable class who make I pander to the morbid taste of that numerous and respectable class who make it their especial study to identify the persons of the aristocracy and chronicle their deeds? Vade retro—be it far from me! The titled daughters of England are classed and ticketed in certain catalogues published by authority, with mercantile fidelity. With the same accuracy that is at once his pride and his profession, in measuring her off a thousand yards of tulie for the trimming of her ball dress, can John Ellworthy the mercer, calculate to a day the age of Lady Hildegonda Vavasour. Her ladyship is debarred by the remnants of feudalism from the very birthright of lowlier women, never to exceed sevenlowlier women, never to exceed seven-and-twenty. Like those high-bred Arab steeds which the children of the desert offer for purchase to the Feringhee, there can be no concealment of her age or her performances; and she is sold, so to speak, with her pedigree about her neck. Be gentle with her in her new capacity; like all thorough-bred animals the is staunch and resolute for good and

Lady Gertrude is alone in the privacy of her own chamber. Bedroom, dressing-room, boudoir, sanctuary, it combines something of all these. Her midnight slumbers and her morning dreams take place in a deep and distant recess, containing a charming little French bed. like a toy, draped with a rosy fabric of muslin, corresponding in color and texture with the toilet cover and the pincushion. Her prayer book of purple velvet, crossed and clasped, and bound and bedizened with gold lies within easy. bedizened with gold, lies within easy reach of the lace-edged pillows, and where male imbecility would look in-stinctively for a bootjack, a pair of with sweet little slippers, fawn-colored. bronze tips and beaded embroidery, turn their toes to each other in confiding sim-plicity. A planoforte occupies the corre-sponding recess at the other side of the sponding recess at the other side of the doorway. A piece of music lies open on its stand; it is an oratorio of Handel's—a deep, solemn and suggestive strain, such as to sit and hear with half-shut eyes, from which the tears are not far distant, calls up a vision of the shadowy future and the mournful past, of the bruised reed and the aching heart, of heave and fears and bitter course. hopes and fears, and bitter sorrow, and humble resignation, and the white-robed angels leading the poor penitent home. She is not all frivolous, you see, my she is not all frivolous, you see, my ady Gertrude, though the canterbury Lady Gertrude, though the canterbury by the side of the instrument contains the "Ratcatcher's Waltz," and the "Pray Don't Polka," and other refined and popular music of the modern school. Her book shelves too, bear a strange mixture of literature, light and heavy, ancient and modern. No Byron, no Tommy Moore. A quarto Milton, we dare not say "thumbed," but worn and frayed by the taper-white fingers, and holding even now between the pages of Satan's rebellious peroration a single thread of hair, denoting that, while Justine dresses the silken locks, Lady Gertrude is no less busy than her handmaid with the inner culture of that haughty little head. A voluminous Shakespeare with notes, a translation of Herodotus, Swedenborg's transcendental lucubrations Euclid which she cannot ware oorg's transcendental lucubra-cuelid, which she cannot undertions. Euclid, which she cannot understand, but perseveres at from sheer obstinacy, even to the hopless and utterly futile task of learning him by heart; Schiller, in the original whom she doesn't care much about; Tennyson's "Maud," that she would never confess she cries over like a child; sundry excellent works of reference on chemistry, ontics gradory and other soils. optics, geology and other sciences; two or three odd volumes of sermons, new and stiff in their binding, as if but rarely consulted, and a French novel, doubteristited, and a French novel, doubt-se contraband, and having no business ere. By the way, what is the intrinsic erit of this species of literature? Why it gradually becoming so popular in ngland? Is it that the less scrupulous renchman hesitates not to paint phases life which British conventionality af-cts to ignore the while they may the fects to ignore, the while they move the mainsprings of every-day society? or is that he has a happy knack of describ-ing gracefully the mere trifles we all now so well, and imparting an additional charm to the interest every readfeels in matters with which he is mself familiar, as we see a farce run after night, wherein a man eats mutton-chop on the stage, or goes bodily then and there in full sight audience? Whatever may be the attraction, there is no doubt that these works are day by day more generally read, notwithstanding their questionable taste, their doubtful morality, and undisquisitions blushing disquisitions on sentiments which at least we don't write about on this side of the channel. Perhaps there may be something in the language after all, and we may opine with Billy Fudge

"Though the words on good manners in-I assure you 'tis not half so shocking in French." [To be Continued.]

One game doesn't win or lose a championship, any more than one swallow makes a spring, and another period of conscientious, intelligent practice will make the Londons quite as formidable as any bunch in the district.

If Brantford's easy defeat of St. Kitts is to be taken as an indication first few minutes, took the lead an of the relative strength of the teams, were never headed. The match we there must be a measure of truth in all the cheerful predictions the papers of checking close and hard, but the artic there must be a measure of truth in all the Telephone City have been making. The Brantford bunch is a strong one.

The innocents in came rough, and fights, fouls and account of the country of to believe that the Tecumsehs were world-beaters, whereas the Irishmen the Irishman was so roughly used th made them look more like carpet-beaters. By the way, if the national game is to be disgraced by such conduct on the part of players as characterized Saturday's game at Toronto, the sport will suffer. People who are fond of manly sport and who pay their money to see manly sport, don't want to see a bull-fight. From all accounts the game between the Shamrocks and the Tecumsehs was more in the nature of fisticuffs than lacrosse.

WOODSTOCK DREW FIRST BLOOD The large crowd of spectators who witnessed Saturday's lacrosse match saw the local team beaten by the visitors from Woodstock. At no time during the game did the London boys succeed in securing a lead, but not until the final quarter, when Woodstock gained their last two goals, putting them four points ahead, did the London rooters despair of landing the match. As it was they went home with saddened hearts, but satisfied that they had witnessed a fast game and still confident of the ultimate success of their favorites. The Seventh Regiment Band headed a procession of carriages, containing the players, to Tecumseh Park, and enlivened the intermissions between the quarters with catchy music.

It took just five minutes of play in the first quarter to enable the visitors to score their first goal on a straight shot by Rider; but four minutes afterwards London tied the score, the ball going into the net without a scuffle in front of the goal. Lahey scored the next goal ten minutes afterward and finished the scoring for the first quarter. Woodstock 2, London 1. London made a brilliant start after the first intermission, with the evident intention of snowing under the boys in the blue and white. But for all their good intentions only one goal was secured, and six minutes after this Lahey put a second goal to his credit and placed Woodstock in the lead again. Woodstock 3, London 2. At the first of the third quarter some combination work between wall Dowse, Lawlor and O'Brien ended in Dowse putting the ball inside the net, and the enthusiasm of the spectators reached fever height. It was London's last tally, and before the quarter had finished McDonald and Lahey had each put another goal to Woodstock's credit.

Woodstock 5, London 3. In the last quarter there still seemed to be more than a fighting chance for the home team, but when the visitors home, R. Madden, W. Eastwood, F. had scored twice again and but a few minutes remained to play, all doubts were dispelled, and it was an assured fact that London had lost the first championship game of the season. The

The Iroquois played Southams all local men, and did themselves proud. Paris is a much heavier team, and at least half of their line-up is composed of seasoned men of long experience in lacrosse. CORNWALL IS STILL STRONG. Cornwall, June 9 .- The home team outclassed Montreal in the opening game of the N. A. L. A. The visitors only scored the tenth and fourteenth games, the final score being 12 to 2 in favor of Cornwall. The game was a clean one from start to finish. Two Cornwall and two Montreal men were ruled off for minor fouls. Eastwood, of the Cornwall team, was the only man hurt. He received a bad cut accidentally from Haynes' stick in the thirteenth game, and had to retire, Montreal dropping a man to even up. The match was a very pretty exhibi-tion of lacrosse, and Montreal seemed to have more of the game than the score indicates. Their defense field, however, was very weak, and here Cornwall was strong. Only seven of last year's team played on the Cornteam, and Montreal carried almost as heavy a handicap in the junior line. The difference was that the Cornwall intermediate men were quite equal to the seniors, whereas Montreal's juniors were not up to the mark. The teams were:

Cornwall (12)-Goal, J. Hunter: point, M. Broderick; cover, D. Cameron; defense, W. Broderick, W. Burns, Degan; outside, J. Broderick; inside, A. Allan; captain, J. Murphy.

BASEBALL ROWDIES PUNISHED. Buffalo, June 9 .- The board of directors of the Eastern League of baseball clubs met here Saturday and took drastic measures to put a stop to ly hurt and could not continue, Mor- rowdyism on the field. Two fifty-dollar fines were imposed, and President usual in a hot game of lacrosse, there Powers stated that hereafter offenders was considerable rough play, neither will be fined $100 for each offense, and the offending player may be permanently suspended. The umpire question was treshed out, and it was decided to make some changes in the staff. The directors will try to secure the services of Tom Lynch and Swartwood, but it was not stated who they would replace on the present list of umpires. The directors first took up the case of Manager Stallings, of the Buffalo team. and Umpire Rinn, who had a personal encounter on the Buffalo grounds early this week. Both men have been under suspension. They were reinstated Saturday afternoon, and Manager Stallings was fined $50. Manager Barrow, of the Toronto team, who struck Umpire Kelley at Worcester, was also fined $50. Kelly, of Montreal, and Bannon, of Toronto, who engaged in a mixup on the Toronto field Friday, were and A. A. Lees, Hamilton. Probably the oldest horse in America is owned by Major Robert Mass, of Louisville, Ky., who has papers proving his age to be over 47 years. He is named Ivanhoe, and is a large bay, with a blaze face, and up to a year ago a very docile disposition; of late, however, he has grown irritable, and almost vicious toward strangers; to his master and the children he is the same as ever. He bears on his right flank 000. He was also used as a charger in the civil war, and three separate times when his rider was unhorsed from found his way home to his pasture.

> A great change has come over the spirit of New York turf writers regarding the starting of Mr. C. J. Fitzgerald. A year or two ago it was their wont to sneer at him as "this Canadian," and it was more than hinted that he gave Martimas his Futurity by the length of time he kept the youngsters at the post. Now, seemingly, nothing is too good to say of Mr. Fitzgerald, who, it will be remembered, started on his career by a decidedly lamentable exhibition at the Woodbine, writes "Pop" in the Toronto World. It is the New York Sun that, speaking in praise of the no-recall system-which Mr. Mars Cassidy has magnificently scored with both at Toronto and Hamilton-says: "Mr. Fitzgerald has earned the confidence of the public, and his work with the barrier cannot be much improved upon." Messrs. Whitney, Keene, Mackay, Featherstone, Belmont, Hitchcock and others all term the no-recall system a pronounced success, and it is certain of the same mind is the public, whose patience is not now taxed, except between races, when the delay at times seems a little bit too long.

THE OAR. ARGOS LEAVE FOR HENLEY TO.

MORROW. Toronto, June 9.-Lou Scholes, of the Dons, and the members of the Argonaut Rowing Club's eight, who will compete at the Henley Royal Regatta, will leave Toronto tomorrow on the 2 o'clock boat, for New York whence they sail on June 11 for Liverpool. Mr. Scholes, who is entered in the race for the diamond sculls, will be accompanied by his father, and they are confident of securing the prize, notwithstanding the fast scullers the Canadians will compete against. With Joe Wright as stroke oar, the Argos are pulling faster than ever before and such a good judge as Fred Hall states that, like Lou Scholes, their chances are good.
