SCISSORED SELECTIONS.

"Kee-es Me some More."

An American naval officer, who had spent some considerable time in China, narrates an amusing experience of the ignorance of the Chinese maidens of the custom of kissing. Wishing to complete a conquest he had made of a young mel jin (beautiful lady) he invited her-using English words-to give him a kiss. Finding her comprehension of the request somewhat obscured he suited the action to the word and took a delicate kiss. The girl ran away in another room, thoroughly alarmed, exclaiming: "Terrible man-eater. I shall be devoured." But in a moment, finding herself uninjured, she returned to him saying: "I would learn more of your strange rite. Kee-es me." He knew it wasn't quite right, but he kept on instructing her in the rite of "kess-es me," until she knew how to do it like a native Yankee girl. And after that she suggested a second course remarking, " Kec-28 me some more, seen jine Mee-lee-kee!' (Angliee American) and the sson went on until her mamma's voice rudely awakened them from their delicious dreams.—Boston Herald.

----Advice to a Young Man.

(R. J. Burdette.) And then remember, my son, you have to Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging itches or editing a paper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work marriages. The advertising column of a paper, is to the publisher what the house or farm is to the real estate owner—his source of income.
Why anyone should expect the newspaper publisher to be more generous in squandering his substance than any other business man, it What does he call you then?" "He calls something that cannot be accounted for, excent on the supposition that some persons "Yes," said a well known man-about- for the love of the work, and that ink and figure very Heaven to sinful men who publish newspaper road to fortune and who hope not for reward on this side of the grave.

Costly Funerals.

Prose and Poetry of a Sad Ceremoniai They had the poor woman in a $50 coffin. The beautiful bunch of white roses in the one hand that was exposed did not conceal the marks of toil on her fingers, the calloused places, the distended joints, and the rough skin. Her iron grey hair was neatly brushed down on the sides of her wrinkled forehead, and the black silk gown, folded so gracefully about her, was full of lustre, bran new and evidently expensive. There were ten backs for friends of the family, and the hearse was driven by a man in livery, and had eight costy plumes on top.
"How natural she looked, and what a vely funeral," said a woman who had known the family. "How unnatural she looked, and what an nhuman thing that funeral was," said a male ynic who accompanied her

Why ?" "Because, There was a good woman, a hardworking wife and mother, who never had a ride in a back, whose fingers never pressed a flower, and who never wore silk. New Dress Goods. She didn't have time and didn't have money Now look at her, flowers rare and sweet in her dead hands, lots of carriages following her hearse, and a costly shroud for a body which in life was deemed none too good for a 30 cent worsted. Capt. Shaw, Chief of the London Fire Brigade, who made a tour of inspection of the American Engines Compared "Captain Shaw and unwieldy for the work, and the same may be said of almost everything they have in use. So heavy have their hose and other appliances become that they cannot be carried on the engines, and consequently every station has extra horses and coachmen at, of urse, an extra cost; but this is not the only drawback. The use of heavy appliances necessarily makes quick movements, even on the ground, most difficult, and on ladders, walls, or other heights, simply impossible. Moreover, in America the men are wrapped in heavy oilskins and sou westers, which retard their action and prevent them from getting close to their work. All over the continent of Europe, on the contrary, every effort has been made to lighten the appliances, until, in the eyes of Americans, and sometimes even of Englishmen, they appear ridiculously small. Here in England, and notably in the capital, no effort has been spared to get all the appliances of the strongest and best kind for the hard, rough work, and, at the same time, of the greatest lightness, con sistent with the necessary strength; and the result is a sort of medium between the combrous and unwieldy materials used in America, and the almost toy-like small gear on the continent of Europe. Many of the American steam fire engines are perfect models in every other point but fitness for the special work and lightness. In design, material and workmanship, they compare favorably with any machinery ever made, but they convey the upon the subject more especially referring idea of having been constructed by marine or o two points-the relative loss of stock and comotive engineers, without the assistance or advice of firemen
