Potter's Pure Paint

Observe Carefully

Stir paint thoroughly from bottom of can before using.

Coat all knots with shellac varnish or knotting.

Apply paint as found in package, after thoroughly stirring.

Putty all nail holes and cracks after first coat.

In some cases, such as priming new work, Potter's Paint may be thinned with 25 per cent. linseed oil.

Never attempt to paint over a wet surface.

Always rub out paint well under the brush.

Surfaces to be painted should always have two coats.

Paint loses, in some measure, its property of drying in cold weather, therefore provision should be made for this when painting is to be done in cold or frosty weather, by a slight addition of dryers.

MISS PENELTON

The HIDDEN HAND

By Mrs. Southworth.

"You there, old friend? Why, I thought you were down in East Feliciana, with your interesting patient!"

"It is for the interest of that interesting patient that I am here, Herbert! Did I tell you she was one of the victims of that demon, LeNoir?"

"No; but I know it from another source! I know as much, or more of her perhaps than you do!"

"Ah!" exclaimed Traverse, in surprise.

"Yes! I know, for instance, that she is Capitola's mother, the long lost widow of Eugene Le Noir, the mistress of the Hidden House, and the ghost who drew folk's curtains there at night."

"Then you do know something about her, but how did you arrive at the knowledge?"

"By the last dying speech and confession, of Gabriel Le Noir, confided to me, to be used in restitution after his decease! But, come! there is the second bell! Our ... mess are going in to breakfast; join us and afterwards you and I will retire and compare notes," said Herbert, taking the arm of his friend, as they followed the moving crowd into the breakfast parlor.

After the morning meal was concluded the two friends withdrew together to the chamber occupied by Traverse Rocke, where they sat down for mutual explanations.

Herbert first related to Traverse all that had occured from the time that the latter left the city of Mexico including the arrival of Craven Le Noir, at the dying bed of his father the subsequent death and funeral of Colonel Le Noir, and the late emigration of Craven, who, to avoid the shame of the approaching revelation joined a party of explorers bound for the recently discovered gold mines of California.

"The civilized world is then rid of two villians at once," said the uncompromising Traverse.

Herbert took from his pocket the confession of Colonel Le Noir, which he said he was now at liberty to use as he thought proper for the ends of justice. That certain parts of the disclosure intimately concerned Traverse Rocke; to whom he should therefore read the whole. The confession may be briefly summed up as follows:

The first item was, that he had sought to win the affections of Marah Rocke, the supposed wife of Major Ira Warfield; he had sedulously waylaid and followed her with his suit during the whole summer; she had constantly repused and avoided him he, listening to his own evil passions had bribed her maid to admit him in the dark to Marah's cabin, upon a certain night when her husband was to be absent; that the unexpected return of Major Warfield, who had tracked him to the house, had prevented the success of his evil purpose but had not saved the reputation of the innocent wife, whose infuriated husband would not believe her ignorant of the presence of the villian in her house; that he, Gabriel Le Noir in hatred as well as in shame, had forborne until now, to make the explanation, which he hoped might now late as it was, bring the long severed pair together, and establish Marah Rocke and her son in their legal and social rights.

The second item in the black list of crime was the death of his elder brother, whom he declared he had not intended to kill. He said that, having contracted large debts which he was unable to pay, he had returned secretly from his distant quarters to demand the money from his brother, who had often helped him; that, meeting his brother in the woods, he made this request. Eugene reproached him for his extravagance and folly, and refused to aid him; an encounter ensued, in which Eugene fell. He, Gabriel Le Noir, fled, pursued by the curse of Cain, and reached his own quarters before even his absence had been suspected. His agency in the death of his brother was not suspected even by his accomplice in other crimes, the outlaw called Black Donald, who, thinking to gain an ascendancy over one whom he called his patron, actually pretended to have made away with Eugene Le Noir for the sake of his younger brother!

The third item of confession was the abduction of the nurse and babe of the young widow of Eugene, the circumstances of which are already known to the reader.

The fourth in the dreadful list comprised the deceptions, wrongs and persecutions practiced upon Madame Eugene Le Noir, and the final false imprisonment of that lady under the charge of insanity, in the private madhouse kept by Doctor Pierre St. Jean, in East Feliciana.

In conclusion, he spoke of the wrongs done to Clara Day, whose pardon, with that of others, he begged. And he prayed that in consideration of his son, as little publicity as was possible might be given to these crimes.

During the reading of the confession the eyes of Traverse Rocke were fixed in wonder and half incredulity upon the face of Herbert, and at its conclusion he said:

"What a mass of crime! But that we may not dare to question the mercy of the Lord, I should ask if these were sins that he would ever pardon? Herbert, it appals me to think of it!"

Then, after deep thought, he added: "This, then, was the secret of my dear mothers long unhappiness! She was Major Warfield's forsaken wife! Herbert! I feel as though I never, never, could forgive my father!"

"Traverse, if Major Warfield had willfully and wantonly forsaken your mother, I should say that your resentment was natural and right!—Who should be an honorable woman's champion if not her own son?—But Major Warfield, as well as his wife, was more sinned against than sinning! Your parents were both victims of a cruel conspiracy, and he suffered as much in his way, as she did in hers," said Herbert.

TRAIN DERAILED.

Switch Opened on the C.N.R. Near Winnipeg and a Train Left the Track—Four Men Injured.

Winnipeg, July 4.—There is considerable excitement in C.N.R. circles in connection with the strike. Wednesday night three wires connecting Winnipeg with St. Paul ... at some points, and shortly after midnight the switch at Portage Junction, about three miles south of the city, were maliciously opened in such a way that a train going in either direction would leave the track. The result was the derailing of an engine and six cars. Four men were injured, but none seriously.

Two $500 Rewards Offered.

General Superintendent Hanna has offered a reward of $500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties, in the above case, and a reward of the same amount will be given by him for information leading to the arrest and conviction of any person who may in any way interfere or tamper with the property of the C.N.R. He charges that the wreck was caused by strikers.

The Unions Rejoinder.

As a rejoinder to Mr. Hanna's charges, Mr. Galt, Vice-President of the United Brotherhood of Railway Employes, says such work is entirely discountenanced by the Strike Committee, and in behalf of the strikers he offered a reward of $50 for the arrest of the guilty party or parties.

Only a Few Men Out.

Toronto, July 4.—Light was thrown upon the situation on the Canadian Northern Railway Wednesday by a telegram received by Mr. Phillips, the local agent of that railway. The telegram was as follows: "There were not more than 150 men out; of this number at least fifty per cent. have returned to work. Trouble is dissolving, and we expect to be having business under normal conditions within twenty-four hours." The message is signed by the traffic manager in Winnipeg.

"COMMUNITY OF INTERESTS."

Belfast Ship Building Magnate Prefers to So Call "Morgan Combine.

London, July 4.—The committee of the House of Commons appointed to inquire into the question of subsidies heard William J. Pirrie, chairman of the Harland & Wolff Shipbuilding Company yesterday. This witness, who figured so prominently in the recent J. Pierpont Morgan shipping combine, expressed the opinion that subsidies were given merely as a bounty, and serve to encourage inefficiency, and that, even where they could be legitimately bestowed, the tendency of subsidies would be to foster individual as against general interests. Mr. Pirrie regarded foreign subsidies as a blessing in disguise, as they stimulated British ship owners to keep more abreast of the times.

Purely Business.

Replying to a question of the chairman, Mr. Pirrie said the Morgan combine, which he preferred to call a "community of interests," was established purely for commercial purposes and on entirely business principles. He was convinced that a dangerous international situation was rapidly approaching at the time the deal was effected, but by the creation of this community of interests the future of British shipping, as well as of British shipbuilding, was assured. In short, Mr. Pirrie considered the deal to be in every way satisfactory to the British. Giving subsidies would only invite retaliation in the most important markets of the world. The extent of state assistance to German shipping was greatly exaggerated.

Must Wake Up.

Mr. Pirrie also said that the feeling against the combination was due to misapprehension. All they had been doing was to act on the advice of the Prince of Wales, when he said "England must wake up." Mr. Pirrie thought that the best way for the Government to help British shipping was to deepen the approaches to and otherwise improve the chief ports.

Joshua Sanford Recovering.

Paris, July 2.—Joshua Sanford is recovering so rapidly from his four days in the well that a conference was held yesterday afternoon for the purpose of bringing him to town. His sisters, however, objected so vigorously for fear of harm to their brother that the removal was postponed for a few days. Dr. Dunton says he is out of danger, but ought to get well within the next two weeks.
