Storing Potatoes.

Strictly speaking no one ought ever to store potates in the house cellar. But as hundreds of thousands do it every year, and will continue to do so a word may not prove amiss. And, first, potatoes should be sorted while in the field. It saves the housewife ed while in the field. It saves the housewife some work, and it saves storage room and the later work of extra handling. Potatoes for the cellar are best barreled, as they are moveable when the accidents of time bring frost or water to the cellar supposed to be proof against both. Above all, potatoes in the cellar should be kept dark. Canvas sacks make good curtains to set off a portion of the cellar and good covers for the barrels. Light will ruin the flavor of all potatoes, and half light will cause them to sprout far in advance of the season.

Lice in Winter. In the report of the Maine State College for 1895 is printed the following:—During the long winters, when the snow on the the long winters, when the anow on the ground prevents animals from finding dry earth to paw over themselves, they are apt to become lousy. Cattle lice breed rapidly. A single infested animal, if neglected, will before spring become literally alive, and by close contact in the stable and yard is almost contact to the properties of the certain to spread the parasites to the whole herd. These parasites are therefore more apt to give trouble during the winter. Lice irritate the skin. When animals are found rubbing they should be examined at once. If lice are found, separate the infested animals. Search about the neck and shoulders, at the base of the horns, around the eye and nostrils, and along the back. Separate the hair and expose the skin. If lice are present they can generally be detected. A fine-toothed comb could be used in searching. Infested animals are generally restless. When badly infested they lose flesh and the coat is staring. Bare places from rubbing appear on the neck and shoulders. It would be well to examine the animals when they are put into winter quarters and not wait for pronounced cases before adopting remedial measures.

The authorized remedies for lice naturally divide themselves into four classes, viz., powders, unctions, liquids, and fumes. The powders usually employed are pyrethrum, shes or road dust. The unctions are mercurial cintment, and a mixture of keros and lard. The liquids, decoctions of tobac o, stavesacre, or the seeds of the common larkspur: solution of carbolic acid soan or erosene emulsion. The fumes, burning tobacco, sulphur, pyrethrum. Pyrethrum or Persian insect powder should be blown into the hair by means of a pair of small hand bellows until it' is well filled. Ashes could be applied in the same way or sifted over the animal and rubbed in with the hand. Dry fine road dust can be used, and like ashes properly acts by stopping the spiracles of the parasite. This last seems to be nature's remedy, as animals will throw dirt over themselves when they have access to it. The unctions should be applied about the eyes, nostrils, base of horns, upon the neck decoctions are not practical remedies during the winter, unless the animals are kept in warm room during the treatment. The liquid remedies are probably the best and should be resorted to when possible, especially in bad cases. The animals should be taken that the solution is not too strong and keep it out of the animal's eyes The kerosene emulsion should be consider ably diluted. The animals could be carded with a brush dipped in kerosene oil and the lice will be reduced or destroyed.

"Send for nothing or nobody!" he shouted as he passed on to the sitting room and sat down on the lounge with a jar which shook with his arms on the mantel. He looked at her for thirty seconds as the lion looks at his prey before killing, and then said:—

"Woman, things have got to go different around this house or I leave it!" "Why, what's the matter now?" she asked. "Ten thousand things are the matter! Who took a sledge hammer and broke that this morning?" "Tearing the fence down?"

pulling at it, and encouraging a mob of boys to create a hundred dollars' damages." "How foolish of you, Mr. Bowser! If you are ill let me make you some toast and tea, or send for the doctor."
"Here is the gas bill!" he said, as he took

"It came to day, did it? Came to-day! Three dollars for last month! Mrs. Bowser, you couldn't think of any other way to yank the last dollar I had on earth out of my wallet, and so you deliberately turned on the gas every day for a week or two and let it go to waste! Is it any wonder that I am ar lower than it was last month, and it would have been lower still if you hadn't sat up nearly all night for the last three nights "Never! Never sat up a single night! Never played cards! Don't even know a man named Davis! Will you look at this
