A PUBLIC MENACE.

There is a demand for a more serious realization of the menace that exists in the intoxicated driver of motor vehicles. The individual who is not in complete control of all his faculties and who attempts to drive a horse, either on the open highway or in the city streets, is a serious proposition, but there are times when tragedies are averted because of the possession of some degree of intelligence on the part of the horse. This does not apply to the drunken driver of a motor, and as a result there is no protection, either for the inmates of the car or for the travelling public. In several of the provinces, and in parts of the United States, the feeling is that no leniency should be shown to the driver who meets with an accident while driving when intoxicated. Indeed, in Boston there is a close inspection of the drivers, and the man who drinks is not allowed to retain his license as a driver. He is regarded as a menace to the public safety, a factor not amenable to reason and as such not to be allowed to imperil the lives of the general public. The loss of his license, imprisonment and fine is the punishment meted out to him. The police have it in their power to arrest a drunken driver before he has had the opportunity to wreck his car and injure any person. Further there is a strong agitation against giving a license to men who are known to be habitual drinkers. The motor-driven car under control is a safe proposition in the hands of a reliable man or woman; the motor-driven car under worse than no control—for who can fathom the next move of the drunken mind?—is a terrible thing. No small fine should be the only punishment given a man who can neither control himself nor his car, and who drives, regardless of consequences, unaware of consequences, through the city streets and on the highways now filled with children and travellers. The responsibility for accidents must rest somewhere, and it would seem that the municipality will have to take drastic measures to insure its people from the carelessness of the drunken driver.—St. John Globe.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ALLIES STILL.

Providence Journal: The declaration by Premier Herriot that Great Britain has agreed to sign a defensive pact for common action with France, Belgium and Italy in case of premeditated German aggression in the future is not so surprising as regards the aim as it is as respects the time the statement is made. The significance of Premier Herriot's utterance at this time is that it is made on the eve of a new conference with Germany. It is the most compelling evidence Germany has seen since the Versailles Conference that the Allies are standing shoulder to shoulder. Heretofore German plans cannot be predicated on the idea of Allied disunity. Whatever differences of opinion among themselves exist, there is unanimity concerning what action should be taken if Germany should attempt to make trouble. In formulating her own program for the application of the Daves plan, she must appreciate the proposal for a formally constituted, greater and better Entente in Europe.

THE DOMINION'S DUTY.

Cape Argus: There are grounds for insisting that the problem of sea defences is, under post-war conditions, of greater moment to the people of the Dominions than it is to the people of the British Isles, and that, broadly speaking, public opinion in the Dominions has failed to grasp this tyrant and vital fact. This is not for the want of plain-speaking on the part of responsible statesmen in Great

A PUBLIC MENACE.

Britain. Over and over again the Dominions have been warned in the clearest and most categorical terms that Britain cannot alone and for all practical purposes unaided, continue to maintain a sufficiency of naval strength to guarantee the safety of the Dominions against possible aggression in the future. She will do everything she can, and her utmost resources will be always available for the common defence. But even the One Power standard—the irreducible minimum of comparative safety—can in future only be kept up by the joint efforts and sacrifices of the Empire as a whole.

THE LAW AND THE MAN.

Kansas City Times: Laws are necessary, but their service is increased when they are administered by competent individuals. A good system of government in a city as in the nation, is in itself an important asset. But more important still is the type of officials who are selected to administer the system. Good officials and good laws make a wonderful combination. But even good laws with irresponsible officials are next to worthless.

NO NEED FOR EXCITEMENT.

Detroit Free Press. It will be a mistake to become excited over the theft of the American flag from the embassy grounds in Tokio. The act plainly was performed by an irresponsible person of a type of which the United States itself possesses altogether too many. It certainly does not in any sense represent official sentiment in the Mikado's Empire. The Tokio Government already has expressed its regret and has apologized and has assured Washington that every effort will be made to find the culprit and punish him. This ought to be sufficient to satisfy any reasonable person.

THE PEOPLE AND THE PRESIDENCY.

Indianapolis News: Delegates are not sent to a national convention as representatives of the party voters to be harried and driven into the support of aggressive candidates by the aggression of such candidates. Neither McAdoo nor Smith has risen in the esteem of the country as a result of their chase for the nomination, and that they have fallen in the esteem of a good many people who formerly had kindly regard for them can hardly be doubted. The idea that the people should choose their Presidential nominee seems to have given way to the idea that the nominations can be grabbed by the aspirant, who is most aggressive. Perhaps it can, but that the people will approve such methods is extreme doubtful.

THE ITALIAN TYRANNY.

N. Y. Herald-Tribune: The Italian incident (the murder of a Socialist Deputy who was preparing an attack upon the Government) repeats the lesson which the world was learning when the United States came into being—that efficiency has its drawbacks as well as democracy, and that it is necessary to strike the working balance. The danger of the Mussolini example was always that people would try to apply Mussolinism where conditions did not warrant it in Italy in 1921. Parliaments and Congresses may be bad, but unless we cling to the belief that they must be made better, we might as well surrender all faith in representative government.

AMERICA AND EUROPE.

London Times: American withdrew from Europe from fear of excessive commitments and also because European disputes after the war seemed to have fallen to a level of such petty, local, and ignominious squabbling as could neither stir her idealism nor affect her interests. By various causes this temper of reaction against a quarrelsome Europe has been gradually modified. There is a new interest, a new curiosity, a sense that, after all, the state of Europe does in the investigation of that remote European situation, and they have reported, and their report carries weight. There is accurate information at last, something definite to go upon. For the United States it is of the highest importance that the plan for recovery, which is now the great hope of Europe, owes so much to American inspiration and to practical American effort. In this great scheme the national prestige of the United States is involved.

A CHANGE FOR THE WORSE.

Chicago Tribune: The alternative to private enterprise toward which we have been tending is variously commended to us as nationalization, public ownership, "peopleization" (a wonderful bit of buncombe, that word). These all imply that we, the people, are going to take over the profitable activities represented by railroads, mines, banks, and great manufactures, etc., and appropriate to ourselves benefits now absorbed by greedy private owners and grinders of the poor. But a little thought will disclose that when we nationalize or "peopleize" an enterprise we cannot take it over actually such of us. What we do, actually, is take it out of its present managers' hands and put it into the hands of other managers; we take it out of business hands and put it into the hands of politicians.

KENYA AND SWAZAL.

London Telegraph: The compromise arrived at in London last year in regard to the civil rights of Indians in Kenya has profoundly dissatisfied their countrymen; and although Lord Reading and his Ministers have associated themselves strongly with the Indian attitude, there is no doubt that the failure to obtain complete equality of status in Kenya had much to do with the sweeping gains made by Swazal in the recent elections and the bringing about of the extremely difficult political conditions now facing the Central and Provincial Governments. It is hard to take a hopeful view of the future development of this question so long as Indian nationalism continues to take an impracticable and one-sided view of the matter; for the compromise undoubtedly goes to the very limit of what can in fairness be conceded to the Indian settlers.
