

HOW TO MAKE MUSHROOM SPAWN.—Get some cow-dung and horse droppings of nearly equal quantities, and get some maiden earth, and mix them in the proportion of four parts of the cow and horse droppings, to one part of maiden earth, till the mass be thoroughly worked and incorporated, as you would lime and sand to make mortar; spread it on a level surface about three or four inches thick, to let some of the moisture evaporate, and until it gets tough, and in such a state that it will cut readily in brick-shaped pieces with a spade, which will be in three or four days; have ready some spawn, which is procured from an old pasture; it is also found in decayed, cold, dry hotbeds, horse tracks in mills, and in most old dungy compost heaps. Having removed the bricks to a dry airy place, and when they are about half-dry, make a hole in the centre of each, and place a piece of spawn in it. Stove them away in a dry shed, and keep shifting them occasionally till they are perfectly dry, keeping the side up that the spawn has been placed in. Pile up the bricks in an open manner as they build pigeon holes, bringing the bricks to a sharp point, having first placed under them a layer of well fermented stable dung, so that a gentle heat may be generated around and through the bricks; this will make the spawn run and spread through the bricks, and when this is observed let them cool gently, and store them in a cool, dark airy place for use, as it may be required—they will keep thus for several years.
