operative Association in Ireland, who would explain more olearly than he possibly could, the object of their meeting there that evening. One thing was clear—that his purpose was to do something to promote ther development of industries of every kind in Ireland (appliause). It might be fairly said there is, perhaps, no country in the world that needs this development of native industries more than Ireland. Walking down the street of town, and looking at the state of squalor and poverty and chronic wrethedness which it at present displayed, as contrasted with the rich and mighty British Empire of which they haved to some south one could not help feeling that they laid no share in England's prosperity (applause). He spoke to a few people present, who knew the time when Loughrea had a population of $,000 inhabitants, and now it had less than 2,000. He did not propose to address them on the cause of this great decay. There must be some great cause for this most disastrous state of things. For his own part he regarded the primary cause as the absence of agricultural industry was the basis of the prosperity of this country. They must till the land to have the and the properity of the country. The Society represented by Mr. Russell had done good work, and home industry was one excellent branch of this Association. VOTIVE CHAPELS.
Exclusive of the daspel of St. Peter, in the crypt of the new Catholic Cathedral, there will be twelve others, of which five lave been provided for in whole or in part by benefactors. Every effort is now being made on the part of those responsible for the erection of these responsible for the erection of the Cathedral to ensure the hompleton of two or more of these chapels, as regards their internal decoration, in thus for the opening. That markies and mesales should be relied on, for the main part of the adornment and enrichment both of the Cathedral and its chaptles, follows as a natural consequence upon the choice of the Byzantine style of architecture. Much of the more precious marbles have been obtained from the ancient classical quarries, one in Thessaly, and the other in Eudoca. It may be doubt. Much of the more precious marbles have been obtained from the ancient classical quarries, one in Thessaly, and the other in Eubosa. It may be doubted if the former has ever been worked since the workmen of Justinian carved out the "verdo autico" monolity which are to be seen by the traveller under hie dome of $8. Sophia. As a digression it may be mentioned that several of these marble monoliths intended for Westimater Cathedral became the prizes of war of the Turks when overquanting Thessaly some three years ago. Fortunately their unwieldy bulk, coupled doubtless with a compiete ignorance of their worth, saved them from transportation to Constantinople, as regard; the mosaic work, it will probably be given, or a very considerable portion of it, to the most distinguished master of the new school which has, within the lact forty years, spring up in Roma, Professor Seltz, Els father was a cell-knowebook solol. The enthust in with which the Feast of St. is org at a kept all over the country on Monday, April Ard, has avakened some currently as to the flexibility of the entry of English's almed protection. He has been confounded with the Arian dicorge, who succeeded to the usured place of St. Athanasius as Bishop of Alexandria. The real St. tieorge, however, had lived and suffered long before his seandatous namesake. He is said to have suffered martyrdom as early as 285 at Lyd", near Syria, and that at a very critical juncture in the history of the early Church. We find the name of St. George in almost all the early galenders of the West. Thus he figures in St. Jerome's marryrotogy, also in the sacramentary of St. Gregory, In the reign of King Canute a monastery was dedicated to his memory at Tethford, and William I. founded the collegiate Church of St. George at Oxford. Richard I. of England is said to have rebuilt the shrine of the sain ta Lydda, and since his time the people of England have ever manifested a growing affection for St. George, their protector

On Saturday last the Mesers. Cleeve sent a contingent of no less than 1,000 children from Limerick to the great gathering of youngeters in the Phoenix Park, Dublin. These were all children of the employees of the firm in their various establishments in the counties of Limerick and Tipperary. The Mesers. Cleeve are the largest employers in the South of Ireland, as they have working for them over 3,000 hands. This firm has revolution; led the condensed milk trade, having driven the Swiss milk completely out of the market, and in addition they truu out an enormous quantity of spiendid butter each year.
