DIVIDING THE LOAF.

A WORKING man made a very effective address on this subject before some of his fellow laborers. He commenced his remarks holding in his hands a loaf of bread, and a knife.

The loaf of bread he used to represent the wages of the working man. After a few introductory remarks he cut off a moderate slice, and laying it down, "This," he said, "is what we give to the city government;"—this was what they paid for the protection, improvements, and privileges afforded by the city. He then cut of a larger slice and said, "This is what you give to the county and state government." Then with a vigorous flourish of his carving knife, he cut off three quarters of the whole loaf. "This," he said, "you give to the brewer." By this time only a thin slice remained. He set aside the greater part of this for the saloon keeper, leaving only a few crumbs, to which he pointed and said, "This you keep to support yourself and family."

Friend is this the way you divide your wages? If so, don't be foolish any longer. Keep for yourself, your family, and good works all remaining, after the two first slices.
