

Accompanying the Conference will be an exhibition of space technology demonstrating Canadian industrial and technological capabilities in the space sector as well as our expertise in applications. A satellite-delivered health care experiment, which will be broadcast live to the Conference hall, will demonstrate how space technology can be used to bring essential health services to remote areas.

The Canadian delegation will include representatives from the federal and provincial governments, the space industry and the university community.

The First UNISPACE conference was held in 1968.