

Still, it does not suffice to say that we are proud of our forbears; let us also be proud fathers of our sons, for tomorrow. That is how we will develop this country of ours, that we will grow, that we will prosper.

If I were allowed to do so, I would ask every Canadian to rally around that symbol so that it may be truly ours. One must realize that since the treaty of Westminster we are a free country, master of our destiny. Canada not only has the right to appoint commissioners but ambassadors also to other countries and to sign treaties and enter into trade agreements and other treaties with all the countries of the world. Therefore, we are an adult country and we must act like adults.

May that single maple leaf flag fly over our buildings and may we say proudly and sincerely when looking at it: "O Canada, mon pays, mes amours."

(Text):

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.