EATON'S $15.50 RANGES For Gas, For Coal, For Wood

In choosing a Range, you should look for something more than merely a metal box, more or less ornamental, that will hold a fire and boil a kettle. Economy of fuel, thorough combustion, heating efficiency both at the top holes and in the oven, durability, size and style of grate, methods of handling drafts, etc., have been studied carefully, and in these Ranges we have reached something pretty close to perfection. They are adjustable to your problems of draft, and can be accurately handled to give the best results from the least fuel, and with the minimum of attention.

The Acme Gas Range is Safe

A handsome, compact Range, with four top burners and a simmering burner, a 16-inch broiling oven and a 16-inch baking oven. It overcomes the greatest objection to the average gas range—the danger of explosions. In the "Acme," even if the oven were to be filled with gas-the usual cause of the trouble-the door must be opened to light the jet, and without the pressure of the closed door no explosion is possible. The bottom of the oven is a loose sheet, and can be replaced if it should burn thin. This is a strong point for the "Acme," as it often saves the entire replacing of the range after some years' use. A Splendid Gas Range at ... ... ... ... 15.50 has four holes, No. 8, duplex grates, nickel trimmings, etc. By a special arrangement of the flues, combustion is perfect, and the flaming gases are carried completely around the oven before they escape up the chimney;

hence it is very economical of fuel, and is a splendid baker. A Satisfactory Coal Range.... 15.50

The "Acme B" Wood Range is among the foremost, and, we believe, is the first en tirely practical purely wood-burning range. It is a No. 8, four-hole range with a cast iron fire-box that will take 22-inch wood, and has a sheet flue. The Best of Quality in Wood Ranges at ..... 15.50

These Ranges are our special leading lines. Others at lower or higher prices also embody the various features that put these in the front rank of the Canadian market.
