Devoted Specially to the Interests of our Woman's !!! Women Readers.

All the year round the habitual wearer of linen collars is more or less a martyr to the unaccountable and incomprehensible fashion of walling the neck about with a linen band. But when the mercury begins to be gay and shows a preference for dizzy heights on the thermometer scale, when the linen collar fashion. It permits to the wearer only one attitude.

When height is of paramount imoprtance, so it is this season, the wearer of this collar develops an equine fashion of lifting the head, throwing it upwards so that the exquisitely painful prods of the collar her head directly as she could do were her neck minus a collar; upwards and across is the movement, as though she were describing a right angle in the air with her head. Again if she attempt to look down anderly forgetting for a moment the linen neck constrictor, she suffers all the dreadful symptoms of strangulation. To avoid this she must crane upwards and then spok down as though she were peering over a high fence at something directly below.

Then, if it be a round pointed collar, it is this season made like one which I purchased for 18 cents, and wore for exactly ten minutes. The front is much higher than the back—why Heaven only knows—and although the painful prods from the points are not felt, this collar is ingentiously constructed to seize the delicately soft fesh of the throat and inj it as though it were in the pincers of a lobitier. On account of its height in front, it also maliciously acts as a species of saw at every and any turn of the head that is not appeared. The most comfortable way of wearing such a collar is to discard it as soon as it is put on; but if a woman must be fashionable, she can wear this instrubent of torture with the lenst anguish by turning her face skywirds and tearty spirit, which in a man would degenerate into proto be gay and shows a preference for diszy heights on the thermometer scale, the victim of the linen collar fashion. It permits to realize what an instrument of torture this supposedly indispensable a click of attire can become. It is then that shot begins to consider the nature of the linen collar, to remember its little pointed peculiarities, and to marvel at the contrast between its innocent snowy appearance and its diabolical behavior when attached to the shirt waist. For no accessory of a woman's tollet is so harmless in appearance. To all intents and purposes it is merely a linen band, supposedly shape with regard for the pose of the head, and the various necessary motions of the same, and the neck whefeon the head turns.

But a collar in the hand or in the shop is a different thing from a collar on the neck whefeon the head turns.

But a collar in the hand or in the shop is a different thing from a collar on the wearre, such as no hair shirt or mediaevi instrument of penance could have surpassed. Of course I refer to the modern woman's collar and not to the sensible half inch bands that were the fashion in earlier days. One style which came in this year, and which can count its height in inches, is made with square points that ap over in front. This is a mere device, however, invented by some unknownementy to womankind, for when rastored in place these points act as spears of the head.

When height is of paramount imoprrance, as it is this season, the wearer of this collar develops an equine fashion of lifting the head, throwing i powards so that the exquisitely painful produced. So he cannot turn points may be anothed and across is the evolvement, as though she were need the neck minus a collar; upwards and here in the pain with the air with he adrons is the evolvement, as though she were need the neck when the collar develops an equine fashion of lifting the head, throwing i powards so that the exquisitely painful produced. So cannot turn points may be anothed. So cannot turn points may be anothed. The
