The value of instituting athletics in the camps and the significance and importance attached to this work is fully realized by military officers, if the largeness of the scale on which sports are to be engaged in in No. 1 district is an example. Boxing Beneficial.

Perhaps the most beneficial phase of military athletic activity is boxing. With Sergt. Recreational Value.

In France and on the foreign seas, where the career of the soldier and sailor is extremely strenuous at times, and deadly monotonous at others, the recreational value of sports naturally becomes the more important. Men just out of the trenches after nerve-racking days amid flying bullets and bursting shells turn instinctively to athletics for diversion. But at first the problem is distinctly one of educating body together with mind along lines of offensive fighting.

In France and on the vitar elements of discipline.

There are plenty of games of this sort which, besides promoting good feeling, develop self-control, agility, mental alertness and initiative, all bases on which to build military efficiency. Moreover, men who were denied the pleasure of participation in boyhood sports are now given an opportunity of experiencing the enjoyment derived from these games. It is laughable and rather pathetic to see a soldier whose vouthful lot has been a hard one take part in these simple but enjoyable exercises for the first time. ive fighting.
