

GRAFTON'S

HERE'S NEWS THAT MEN WHO NEED CLOTHING CAN READ TO BEST ADVANTAGE

The important thing in these days of inflated prices and deflated qualities is to get values for your money, and this news is to tell you why you can get the best value at Grafton's—because when you buy at Grafton's you buy directly of the makers and you are sure, therefore, of getting better fabrics and better tailoring than any other store can afford to give for the same price. You can make your selection from the largest variety of new styles, new fabrics and new patterns to be found anywhere in London. The young fellow who wants the smartest trench models or other snappy effects can find them here. The conservative man who wants correct style in a more modified form also can be pleased. In short, Grafton's is the store where you can get just what you want, and get it for less money than you'd have to pay elsewhere.

SUITS and OVERCOATS Your Money Will Buy for $15, $20, $22 and $25

And we'll go as far as to state that they are suits and overcoats such as you cannot equal in any other store at or near these prices. Their style is what first attracts the men who pass our windows. It's smart and snappy, whether the suit or overcoat is for the young or older man.

RASPUTIN—DEVIL OR SAINT

by The Princess Radziwill

(Copyright, Canada, 1917. Exclusive district rights secured by London Advertiser.)

Rasputin Came Near Earning His Just Deserts When a Woman Whom He Had Duped Attacked Him With a Kitchen Knife She Had Been Following the "Saint" for Years in an Effort to Avenge Herself for the Wrongs She Had Suffered.

The wound inflicted, though serious, was not fatal, and with the aid of the best surgeons in Russia the "Black Monk" recovered—He said that at the moment he was stabbed an Angel Descended From Heaven to Stay the Woman's Arm.

One morning, it was the 13th of July, 1914, Rasputin was leaving his house on his way to church, whither it was his custom to repair every day. On the threshold of his dwelling a woman was awaiting him. She had her face buried in a shawl in spite of the warm weather. When she saw him she threw herself on her knees before him, as persons of her kind invariably did when they met him. The "Prophet" stopped and asked her what it was that she wanted from him. Her only reply was to plunge into his stomach a large kitchen knife, which she had held the whole time hidden under her shawl.

The Attack on Rasputin

Rasputin uttered one cry and sank upon the ground. The crowd which was always following him rushed to ward him and lifted him up, while two local policemen who had been guarding him threw themselves upon the woman and seized her violently by both arms. She remained perfectly quiet, declaring that they need not hold her, as she had not the slightest intention of running away. She knew very well what she had done, and she had meant to do it for a long time. When asked what had been her motives, she declared that she would speak before the magistrates and only asked to be protected in the meanwhile against the fury of the mob that was threatening to tear her in pieces in its rage. She did not seem to be in the least disturbed by what she had done, and throughout she showed the most extraordinary coolness and self-possession.

Very soon it was ascertained that she was a native of the Government of Saratov, and that her name was Gousieva. When Rasputin had been preaching in Saratov she was among the women who had been taken in by his speeches, and, though married, she left her husband and followed him. "Prophet," he very soon proceeded to "clean her from her sins" according to his favorite expression. "We knew, of course, what this meant, and Gousieva, who at that time was young and pretty, only shared the fate of so many women deluded by the mealy-mouthed utterances of the "Saviour," that it was only by means of a complete union with himself that they could be saved and their sins forgiven them. The unfortunate Gousieva had only been one of the many who had found it out an intense rage had taken hold of her, which had been further enhanced and strengthened by the many illudors, to whom she had related her misfortune. He had already at the time she sought him out become the deadly enemy of his former friend, Rasputin. This miserable woman had lost everything—home, children, husband, relatives—on account of her mad infatuation for the deceiver, who had made her forget her duties by the fasci-cination which he had exercised over her weak mind. She swore that she would revenge herself and kill the "Prophet," so that at least other women could be saved from the awful fate which had befallen her.

After Rasputin had dismissed her she had been compelled to lead a dreadful kind of existence in order to obtain a piece of bread. At last she had become attacked by an awful disease, which had already eaten away a part of her nose and completely disfigured her face. This, too, she attributed to the "Prophet." In her despair she decided that as she had nothing to lose the best and only thing left for her to do was to try and rid the world of her awful impostor who had caused so much misery and brought such abominable misfortune and occasioned so much distress to such a considerable number of innocent women. She had followed Rasputin for a long time in St. Petersburg, but had never been able to approach him near enough to execute her design. But when it had come to her knowledge that he was returning to Pokrovskoe she had taken it as an indication that the Almighty would be with her in the deed which she was contemplating, and she, too, started for the distant Siberian village. There she had spent three days waiting for a favorable opportunity until the morning when she had at last succeeded in getting close enough to him to plant in his body the knife which she had carried about with her for more than two years.

The whole story was related by Gousieva with the utmost composure, and without any hesitation at all. She considered Rasputin as the incarnation of the devil, and it was her duty to destroy him. But when it had come to her knowledge that he was returning to Pokrovskoe she had taken it as an indication that the Almighty would be with her in the deed which she was contemplating, and she, too, started for the distant Siberian village. There she had spent three days waiting for a favorable opportunity until the morning when she had at last succeeded in getting close enough to him to plant in his body the knife which she had carried about with her for more than two years.

his friends in St. Petersburg, in which he described the attempt against his life as the work of the devil, who had inspired the woman Gousieva and induced her to commit an abominable action. He added that at the moment when her weapon had touched him he had seen an angel descend from heaven, stop her arm, and then put a hand on his wound so as to stop it from bleeding, and that it was only due to this direct intervention of the Almighty that

How St. Petersburg Reacted to the Attack.

In St. Petersburg the news of the attempted assassination of Rasputin had produced an immense impression, and had been commented upon in different ways. Some people saw in it an intervention of the secret police, who had been told to get rid in some way or other of a man who was fast becoming a public nuisance and embarrassment through their acquaintance with him.

"The 'Prophet' stopped and asked her what it was she wanted from him. Her only answer was to plunge into his stomach a large kitchen knife, which she had held the whole time hidden under her shawl."

he had escaped with his life. Of course, the story was believed by the credulous people, who accepted every one of his words as a manifestation of the will of the Lord, and he became more and more a saint, to whom one began to raise a good altar and to regard in the light of another Saviour come to redeem mankind from the terrors of sin.

CLINTON HERO WAS WARMLY WELCOMED

CLINTON, Nov. 1.—Lieut. Edgar Torrance, who spent about a year in France, received a hearty welcome on his return last night. He was met at the station by the mayor and council and a host of friends. A procession was formed, headed by the Clinton City Band, and marched to the home of his father, Inspector John Torrance, on Albert street. Lieut. Torrance received injuries in the head which caused the loss of one eye, and he is now home on three months' leave. According to reports, there are about one hundred young men registered for military service, but so far there are no volunteers, as all are asking for exemption, many of the number being farmers.

ARM BADLY MANGLED WHILE CUTTING CORN

EXETER, Nov. 1.—The flesh of John Cann's forearm was badly mangled, when he got it caught in the gearing of a corn cutter while operating the machine on his farm in Usborne. A Red Cross nurse will be given by Miss Gladys Shaw and Miss Murworthy, reader, and pupils of Miss Gladys Bisset in James Street Methodist Church on Wednesday evening next. The proceeds go towards soldiers' comforts. Mrs. C. Morley of Woodham has received official word that her husband, Sapper Oscar John Morley, was admitted to No. 3 Casualty Clearing Hospital on October 19, suffering from a lacerated finger. LITTLE DAMAGE DONE. FOREST, Nov. 1.—The fire brigade was called to the residence on Main street, occupied by Mrs. George Frayne and children, and owned by H. Barron of Toronto. The fire, which started from the fireplace, was soon under control, and little damage done. Mrs. Frayne's husband went overseas with the 149th.

FINAL GAME IS AT WOODSTOCK SATURDAY

TORONTO, Nov. 1.—Secretary Hewitson, of the O. R. F. U., was in communication with Woodstock tonight. He learned that matters at the college had been straightened out and that the junior semi-final games with Sarnia will be played as originally scheduled. The first game will take place at Woodstock on Saturday, Leonard Smith of Toronto will referee. REV. DR. CARMAN ILL. TORONTO, Nov. 1.—Rev. Dr. Albert Carman, superintendent emeritus of the Methodist Church, is very ill at home in this city.
