The Farmer's Corner.

Wastes on the Farm.

The greatest of wastes on the farm is the not using of our brains; the greatest because at the bottom of all other wastes. A little thinking often saves much labor. After accomplishing any piece of work, the most of us can look back and see how we could have improved on it, if we had but thought. As we remember our crops of this year, we see how they could have been easily increased, had we only thought. The ditch we dug through our meadow was not done in the most economical way. We dug too deeply at first, and did not allow for the settling of the land. Hence a waste of labor. We could have saved nearly its cost in this year's use until we have spent as much in trying to accomplish our work without it. Here was another waste. We carry a water-pipe too near the surface, to save the expense of digging a trench of safe depth, and the winter's frost necessitates a replacement of the pipe, and an additional digging. Certainly a waste here. We allow the weeds to grow on one piece of land, not thinking to what proportions they would grow by the time the crops were too far advanced to admit the hoe. We waste the ordinary want of appreciation of cleanliness and thoroughness—the wastes from our stock, from our manure-heaps from our household. Verily, a little thought will save to the farmer much, and the saving through this means, even in a small farm, will represent the interest and are in large part inexcusable; as well as those on a large capital. The wastes arising from ignorance can very readily be diminished, arising from carelessness are not deserving of sympathy. The farmer, as well as the business man, must use business principles to secure the largest success, and the one should be as careful of the outgoes as the other. —Scientific Farmer.

Bedding.

In the barn of a model farmer bedding is about as essential as fodder. Bedding saves the liquid manure after it is dried in the stable. It also keeps stock clean, dry, warm and comfortable, thereby saving fodder and grain and promoting the health, beauty and thrift of the animals. You can get along without bedding in your barn as you can in your house, but you can't afford to do without it. To attempt it is slovenly, shiftless and expensive. The time to gather some kinds of bedding is now. There are trees in your swamps, woods by the roadside which should be gathered and saved for your stock to sleep on next winter, and when you have got all these within your reach, you can find plenty of mud and earth which, when dried, will make a good litter and increase your manure heap. Later in the season there will be the forest leaves to gather, and if you can't get anything better, plenty of sawdust at the mill. Any and all of these will richly pay for getting. Don't be afraid of getting too much. No animal was ever injured by having too good a bed, and we have never heard of a manure-heap in this part of the country which was too large.

Value of a Good Stable.

Describing a frost-proof stable the Agriculturist says: It was immediately over the basement, and had for one of its sides the bank wall. This was painted with cement. The other side was made of tongued and grooved inch pine boards, and battened; the lumber well seasoned, and painted. The windows and doors are close-fitting, and there was no crevice left where the wind could creep through. The trap-doors were below, were perfectly tight. We were surprised at the agreeable temperatures as we entered the barn on a bitter cold day. It seemed as if a stove or furnace must have been used in the building. But the proprietor said that the animals were the only stoves in use, and the manure had hardly been frozen in the zero nights. He spoke with great satisfaction of the economy of such a stable. It saves greatly in fodder. All the hay and grain that are used to keep up animal heat in the open air in winter goes, in such a stable to the production of flesh, fat, and milk. The saving is about one-third the value of the fodder consumed. The flow of milk is kept up, and butter is made all winter.
