Philip and I were to go the next afternoon for a few weeks to Bar Harbor, and we were like a pair of happy children planning our holiday. There was no reason for his taking his life. Ha was in our holiday. There was no reason for his taking his life. He was in vigorous health, well off, and we had been married a year, without a really angry word between us. It was a lovers' holiday all the time. That night about 8 I began to feel strangely nervous. There was a man for whom my husband had done many kindnesses, and whom I entirely distrusted. He was a Polish Jew—clever, capable of earning a good livelihood. He had been employed by my husband as secretary at one time, but disas secretary at one time, but dis- audible. missed for his lack of punctuality. I felt no doubt that the Pole had murdered his bonefactor for the money or papers he had about him., I questioned the clerk at the desk again, as to who had seen Mr. Harmon the night of the supposed suicide. No one, was the answer. I then gave as good a description as I could of the Pole, and the clerk at once remembered that such a man had come in about 10.30 p. m., had looked over the register, going away soon after. This proved to my mind clearly that the Pole, having ascertained the number of Mr. Harmon's room, quietly walked up to it, and had left by the fire escape after locking the door on the inside. It was certainly a cleverly planned and executed murder.

I have made the foregoing changes in the business of the ADVANCE for two reasons. The first is because many patrons who have been given credit, have abused the privilege to such an extent as to make the business of publishing the paper a non-paying one, and it is neces-sary, in my own interest and that of those who do pay, that I should no longer continue to furnish the AD TANCE to those non-paying subscribers.

The second reason is, that I. wish to meet the competition of the city weeklies, which are made up from the type of the dailies and, therefore, cost little for production in comparison with a local paper like the ADVANCE, the type of which must be set up especially
