How plainty now can we look back On memory's chiquered plain; On all our childish griefs and joys, And pass them o'er again,

The little brook, beside whose wave
So oft we caused such tarks,
And watched the streamlet as it flowed,
As free as our young hears.

And it en the dear old selands too; How we'd tumble in the grass, And shower the grapes down on our heads, Or watch the young birds pass,

The schoolhouse beneath the hill,
Where we used to sit all day—
Wairing with such a patient look,
The Sun's last lingering ray. Oh, what a splendid play we'd have, When the last task was done, in the shadows creeping o'er the hill, Away from the sinking Sun.

And hush, there were our sweethearts too, You remember—I know you do— Merry Bob, with his waven curls and eyes, And others with "e'en sae blue."

Of that sweet Summer day

Adversity, grief and pain have come, And false friends coolly pass; Till I long to rest my head once more Or, the dear old island grass.

Let's drup some tears o'er their grave, Then turn once more with strengther I o the world's tumultuous wave.
