Breaking away

"Cawfee, please."

Among the more educational events of the Christmas break, was the annual pilgrimage of York theatre lovers, punk rockers and art aficionados to Neeyawk for a crash course in Manhattanese and taxi hailing.

Many new social graces were acquired in Fun City, including how to get into trendy clubs (dress as outrageously as possible and, preferably, in low cut black leather) and how to kill a cockroach (courtesy of the Taft Hotel).

The 188 students, professors and staff members paid between $92 and $144 for the chaotic three nights and four days of the Fine Arts trip. Despite the brevity of the stay, the 13 hour bus trips to and from, and a somewhat less than luxurious hotel ambience, it was well worth it for most. The few nights allowed for the essential plays and dance companies to be seen and for some essential after hours dissipation. Days were spent straightening out in Central Park or in a favourite gallery.

Larry St. Aubin, a third year theatre student, summed it up for most. "New York is like Afghanistan," he said. "You don't know what it's like until you've been there."

Janis Roy, coordinator of the trip, thought that things went very smoothly this year. "Except for two hospital trips, there were no major catastrophes," she said. "188 left and 188 returned."

York students Angie Baldassarre and Bob Vine take in some of the fine art on the New York subway.

"It's a trick"

Among them are job security for teaching assistants past their third year of study; job security for part-time assistants; and contract clauses on sick leave, maternity leave and academic freedom.

Following the Tuesday meeting, a package was delivered to the office of GAA chief negotiator Leslie Sanders from D.J. Mitchell, chief university negotiator. The package contained written versions of the offers made to the GAA by the university earlier that day. In addition it contained a memo which indicated that "the President's Policy Committee has today authorized further latitude in the resolution of other outstanding issues." Excalibur received a copy of this memo as well.

When Excalibur contacted Dr.

Sanders, she indicated she had not opened the package declaring, "It's a trick." She learned of the contents of the memo, only when an Excalibur staff member read them to her.

She later phoned Excalibur and stated, "We're very pleased that the university is interested in re-opening negotiations, but we'll believe what they have to offer when we see it." She still hadn't opened the package containing the memo.

By Wednesday the memo had been posted around the university by the communications department. Michael Michie, chairperson of the GAA, called this an "intimidating tactic which worked the other way. The members took it as an intimidating tactic and were properly scornful of it."

At press time, D.J. Mitchell was unavailable for comment.
