

experience possessed in common by 'all who have obtained like precious faith,' whether Roman Catholics or Protestants, by Christians of all names and nations, and he proved his faith by his works. . . . Amid our various callings, whether in publicity or obscurity, whether in commercial or professional pursuits, let us seek by the divine blessing to be animated by the same high and holy purpose which guided and ennobled the long life of Donald Harvey MacVicar."

Said Rev. Dr. Scrimger on the same occasion: "He was a man of strong personality which never deserted him, and which made him easily a marked man in any assembly where he happened to be. In whatever profession he had chosen he would undoubtedly have made his influence felt upon his fellows, for he had those qualities which fit for leadership anywhere. He had the energy and courage as well as the power of giving clear expression to his convictions, which inspired confidence in those who were in sympathy with his aims, and made them willing to follow his guidance when once he was ready to lead the way. These qualities found abundant scope in the Christian ministry, and early made him one of the foremost leaders of the Church in Canada. His co-operation was felt to be necessary on almost all of its important committees, and he was never absent from the Supreme Court of his own Church except when it was that he might attend as its representative in the Council
