An observant man, who has been several years in Lethbridge, Alberta, says that city is growing fast, and by the close of 1908 will have increased its population by 2,000 at least. It is impossible to get a vacant dwelling or a vacant store. Ten or twelve new stores could quickly and easily be opened there, and some will be built next summer.

A letter from Galt of recent date says: "We have not found a store-keeper who does not say that his trade has been as good as last year notwithstanding reduced wages to factory and foundry employees." While there are a good many idle workmen in town, the manufacturers have not discharged any of their old hands. They retain married men in preference to single; and let the more newly arrived immigrants go.
