The Choice of a Home.

There are timid souls that live withdrawn in a place of their self content. There are souls like mine that dwell apart in a fearless firmament. There are power souls, who blaze the trails where the highways never run. But let me live by the side of the road. And be a friend to man.

I see from my home by the side of the road, by the side of the highway of life. The men who press with the order of hope. The men who are faint with strife. But I turn me away from their signs of their tears.

Both a part of the infinite plan; Let me live in my home by the side of the road, and be a friend to man.

I know there are high-gallopers meadows ahead. And mountains of exultant heights. And the small things through the long afternoon.

But I follow when the twilight comes. And sleep with the strangers that come. Nor live in my home, as the side of the road. As one who dwells alone.

Let me live in my home by the side of the road. While the sun goes by. They are good, they are kind, they are wise. They are foolish, and so am I. Then why should I sit in the corner's seat? Or hunt the cynic's bait?

Let me live in my home by the side of the road. And be a friend to man.

The Tragedy of Whitney's Pond.

In the spring of the year 1757 three adventurous young men, named Whitney, Heald and Reed, set off from their homes in the town of Dunstable, Massachusetts, on a hunting and trapping trip to the Androscoggin River in Maine—a river and a tract of country which, at that early date, very few white men had ever visited. It was the period of the French and Indian War, and the Indians were hostile. The entire country was covered with forest, and so little was known of the geography of Maine that the Androscoggin was then supposed to be in Canada.

Trapping was the announced object of the trip, but in reality these bold youngsters had hopes of securing larger game than otter or bear. The colonial government was then offering an almost princely bounty on Indian scalps. An Indian scalp was worth what is the currency of today, would be very near a thousand dollars.

On the other hand, the French had offered large rewards to the savages for the scalps of New England settlers, and skulking Indians lay in wait in the mountains of every settlement with tomahawk and scalping-knife, sparing neither age, sex nor condition.

It was the hope of securing these large bounties which sent Lovell and his band of rangers to the upper Sacos waters—an expedition which terminated in that famous battle in the forest, which so many pens have celebrated and sung. The plain, prosaic facts of that expedition are that Lovell and his men were in quest of Indian scalps at a thousand dollars apiece.

Not much otherwise was it with young Whitney, Heald and Reed of our present narrative; yet they must not be judged too harshly. Their motives were in accord with the moral code of those days—a code in which there was 'no good Indian but a dead Indian.'

After a stealthy tramp of more than a week, these three trappers came to the great river, and finally built a camp on the shores of a beautiful pond, now called Whitney's Pond, and situated in the present town of Canton, Maine—the outlet of which, a deep, rapid stream, flows down into the Androscoggin. About the pond were abundant signs of game, and here they set traps and hunted for moose, keeping a watchful eye out for the valuable red man.

Just how many days or weeks they continued here and were thus employed, tradition does not make clear; but one evening near the middle of the month of May, as the three were going down the brook to examine their traps, they caught the twinkling of a camp fire on the bank of the Androscoggin. Cautiously creeping nearer they discovered two birch canoes.

Now Cured of Rheumatism

Cost him $100.00 for medicines when he failed—Cured by DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Mr. James Clark, Malden, Mass., writes: "I suffered for four years with rheumatism in my shoulders and could not lift my arms above my head. I tried nearly all the advertised remedies but none of them gave me relief. It cost me at least $100.00 for medicines before I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"With the use of this medicine, I soon found relief. I followed up this treatment for six months and was then quite free from rheumatism. While using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills I also used Dr. Chase's Backache Plaster when so stiff that I could scarcely bend. They always found the weak spot and gave relief while the plaster was on. They always found the internal treatment was bringing about a thorough cure."

The success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills has been phenomenal. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all druggists. Dr. Chase & Co., Portland, Me. Dr. Chase's Recipes will be sent free on request.

Cautiously creeping nearer they discovered two birch canoes.

Whitney then escaped the immediate attention of the redskins, and for a moment lay waiting in an agony of pain on the ground. At last he regained his self-control as he tore strips from his clothing and hid them tightly around his thighs. This stanching the flow of blood, and he presently started to crawl away among the trees; but now he bethought himself to sculp the Indian, whom Heald had shot, and had turned to do so when a crackling of the brush not far away drew his attention. It was caused by the two squaws, who had come forward from their camp to see what had occurred. Seeing his gun, Whitney pointed it at them, whom they fled away, shrieking. He then crept away himself, and although faint from loss of blood and in great pain, he continued to crawl for a long distance into the forest.

Finally, unable to get farther, he hid himself in a dark hole beneath the root of a fallen tree and remained quite motionless. The savages found him, to sell his life as dearly as possible.

But they did not find him. After he had lain there beneath the old root for thirty-six hours or more in a fainting condition, he mustered all his energies and crawled slowly through the forest to the camp where he and his companions had left a considerable stock of food.

Never came on his road for many days. Whitney, however, was a hardy and courageous man, and he was able to make his way through the forest to the camp where he and his companions had left a considerable stock of food.

through the forest, supplying himself with game as he went on. At night he lay down, without shelter, in the lonely woods; and as days passed he became more and more from exposure, exhaustion and anxiety for his wounded companion, whom he had last seen lying helpless and writhing with pain on the ground.

His mother's love was to get home. His only hope was in the search of Whitney's spot. He was nearly exhausted, while trying to make a way as a lonely, inexperienced hunter through the forest.

A Good Position.

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of 'Wireless' or Railway telegraphy. Since the 3-hour law became effective, and since the Wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $80 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R. B. and Wireless officials and places all graduates into position. It will pay you to write them for full details at Cincinnati, O., or Philadelphia, Pa.
