Boctry. FROM "MY UNCLE'S" DIARY. [ORIGINAL]

Come.—I've prompt for a song on demand,
Of the Bastors and Banks of this city.
I'my readers cannot understand
The drift of my thome,—more's the pity!
for the system of Banking—stellars.
Banklo be plain as the mose on the face; And a prominent part of their aim, show To tweak the said ness with disgrace, If it will not not fairly and true

The wag of the Moraing Courier,
Talks largely in technical phrase;
And descants in his point-blank cureer,
On the strength of utility's case.
"Thick and thin" he assumes as his motto,
To prop up his favorite thems Of paper emissions—in toto, in toto, But trust me, 'tie mought but a dessum, Yet he thinks he speaks fairly and true.

Next, "Banquo" comes ambling along About the suppression of notes Of one and two dollars: His song With the latter in company floats He says, that the tailor can get He says, that the tellor can ges
For his next Sunday's dinner, a goose,
On terms for more chess, if small paper were only
Just left, for a time in dispet.

And he thinks he speaks fairly and true.

Young Want to ment with his views;
For mostle his breat withing trade;
Copper, brass, tin and iron produce,
His arguments, all ready made.
He voys that Bank paper and coin
Copper to what Bank paper and coin
Copper to what bear paper and complete. Cannot travel the same road together; But his wit is as heavy, and, heavy as lead, And his remeaning's light us a feather.

The Banks prate of ac-com-mo-dation this point may be mutual I woon;
their dividends, to de-mon-stration,
Will prove their "Look out" to be assen-The their "Promise to pay, on Demand," Seldom wakens the coin from its sleep in their dungeons and wallts,—I can yet They contrive a snug "Bonus" to keep.

And think they act fairly and true, For Directors and Stockholders, and other fulls Who silek to them fairly and true.

From the Greenock Advertiser THE SHIP OUTWARD-BOUND. Showly and sadly moves the ship.
She leaves har native strand,
With presperous wind, and convess set. nd for a foreign land.

A gleam of melancholy light Upon the waves is cast; The sun went down 'mid many clouds, The day is waning fast !

Her sails are spread of sickly white. Her masts are black and high, And far the leaden waste of sea Reflects the leaden sky

In sullen state the ocean queen Tracks her mysterious way, While darker, desper round her fall The twilight mists of gray.

Qh, lone and melancholy ship !.
How many eyes there he has strong their gaze to true the

How many hours are sick with pair
The sister, wife, and mother;
Als equivaling! to rob their homes
Offsiher, husband, brother!

Yet, yet they gatch thy grant form, The dwindled to a speek.— Yet, yet they see, or dream they see, The levid ones throng thy deck.

You, yet they bid thee fond adieu, And wave the puring hand:— mount more—night veils the ship. Bound for a foreign strand!

Oh, sad and solitary ship! To Him who bounds the sea, Who maketh clouds his cherioteers His wings the wild winds free !--

To Him, in humble suppliest faith, Our frensures we commend; When human aid is vain and far, Be then the sailur's friend

Oh, stay the storm, and guide the helm Safe to that distant shore;— The God of Heaven, he with that ship, To guard her evermore!

THE SHIP HOMEWARD-BOUND. Brightly and blythely shone the sun, The morning sun of May, Where, quivering in the early breeze, The extre waters by :

When to? upon the glancing tide The watchers on the strand.

Espied once more the queenly ship.

Bound for her active land!

A mingled about of wild delight.
Straight through the blue air rung—
The welcome of a hundred hunter
In one triumphant ranges?

"To she—'tis she herealf!" Ah well Affection's engle eyes The transmy of her hopes and force

See! as she can the yielding wave, How white her full ottle gloss; four guilt from her navoring mass. The waving paramits given.

rides the subject was, so was cloud in Autom age rubling and free!

Signatic ship? with thee are link'd Affection's holiest give. For thee, when storms blew load, we Wild words and anguish'd eight

For thee hath woman's cheek grown pale, While reged the winds and rain,
"I'll feverish love hath almost touch'd
With fromp's fire the brain!

And now for thee, the lov'd, the lost, Their doubts, their terrors o'er, Oh! rapturous is their thrill of joy To greet thee safe once more.

Go, nother! class thy gallant son, Go, lover! claim thy bride, Go, ester! wife! embrace with amile Your become blies and pride.

Mermaid had breathed her last. This, he sold, was for him a most unfortunate circumstance, since it had deprived him of an appointment from the first lord of the admissility to cruise in the latitudes where she was found, in esserch of a Merman, so as to prepetuate the species usually at home. The confidence with which all this was uttered, was intended to draw the attention from close inspection of that which was half monky and half salmen. The halry body and analytical however, were closerly connected, and scalytail, however, were clearly connected, and the acture was not readily to be discovered. In a short time a scotling newspaper paragraph caused the exhibition to be closed rather suddenly, but not until a very considerable some of money had been drawn from the scarchers after the mercalless.
