The number ed. As we have repeatedly pointed out, the real question at issue in this business is whether or not the Government should guarantee the Company's bonds for a period of thirty years. In the interviews the Patriot publishes from day to day this point is touched very slightly. Generalities are freely dealt in ; opinions are expressed as to the productiveness of our soil, the desirability of having a large enterprise of this nature established in our midst, and the propriety of encouraging such undertakings as the one in question. These are matters concerning which there is no dispute; all are agreed on these points, and their constant repetition in the form of interviews is quite unnecessery. The question is, should the Government guarantee the the Company's bonds. That is what is agitating the public mind South Africa and England just now. Among those interviewed within the last week is Captain Joseph Reid, M. L. A. Mr. Reid's remarks are lengthy and diffuse ; they embrace a great variety of subjects and ramble along with pedantic volubility. But after reeling off about two columns of an interview he practically said nothing. After he had talked round and round the care to give his " personal opinion at this stage," as to whether or not he favored the Government guaranteeing the company's bonds. Surely this is a case of the moun- Governors of Australia and tain being in labor and bringing forth a mouse. Partizans of the Government put forward the argument that the Government would be as much justified in guaranteeing these bonds as certain cities in the Dominion are in granting freedom from taxation and other franchises to manufacturing enterprises. This argument is just as specious as any other advanced; there is no parallel in the cases at all. Any city or town where extensive works are carried on is a gainer thereby, as these works increase the number of buyers and consum ers and consequently increase the circulation of money, increase the taxation and emhance the means of civic improvements-For all these reasons it is quite proper that these cities and towns should grant such enterprises cer-
