The Kite from the Far North

2000年度

The s.s. Kite, Capt. C. W. Green, arrived here to-day with Messrs. 29th, and called first at Brevort, Baf- and the Verite also suffered from the fin's Land, and remained there four masses of twisted iron plate that days. She then went further north were hurled upon their decks. This to Pond's Inlet, thence to Salmon is the greatest disaster that has ever River, where she remained one day. The ice was found packed in on the magnitude it is almost without preshore and had to pass several places where she had intended to visit, and fighting ships. The grief which prosfound ice making each night as she progressed on her journey. Her furthest north was Violet Island, in the recent review here and the not-Pond's Inlet, and when leaving there there was a big floe of heavy Arctic ice. Coming along the coast the ship steamed through 300 miles of ice to Cape Washingham. She passed the Canadian Arctic Exploration ship Arctic on the 25th August, about 4 miles distant at Cortier Head, with ice and water intervening and preventing both ships speaking. The Arctic wintered in Admiral Inlet. The harbor inside Cortier is called Arctic Harbor. As the ice was running to gether, Capt. Green did not think prudent to board the Arctic, which was coming south and bound home to Quebec. The Kite experienced terrific storm in Davis Straits for days, and was lying to most of tha time. The wind blew a hurrican from the N.W., but the Kite came through without damage. The ship went north as far as 73 degrees, o 1,700 miles from St. John's and down about Cumerland Straits, reaching there on the 4th September. Beside Brevort, she also called at Clyde Riv er and Scott Inlet on the Baffin Land coast, found great barriers of ice and in neither place could they row or walk ashore. The party caught lot of salmon at Salmon River, by most of the fish had gone up stream They remained at Salmon River hours, and if they had nets woul have got all the fish they wanted What they took were caught with fly Capt. Green knows this coast well as he wintered down there with Ber nier in the s.s. Arctic. She shipped coal into her bunkers at Brevort ar had fine weather on the run here All the crew are well and glad to home once more. Mate Power of the ship is a Placentia man well known here, and formerly commanded th Walrus. His wife and family resid in New York and he was only he a few days when he embarked the voyage in the Kite. He proa capable and efficient officer.

Seaman Browned from the Kite

While the Kite was going Pond's Inlet about 5 p.m. on the 28t July, seaman Jno. Caldwell, of this city, was sent aloft on the foremas to stow the middle staysail. He had gone up only a few ratlins in th rigging when he was seen to lose his hold and fall backwards over the ship's side into the water. The ship was running about 4 knots at the time and the man was quickly lef astern; but as he went over Mat Power threw him a lifebuoy which he did not attempt to grasp, while a few minutes afterwards a boat was lowered away, manned by Bosui Carroll and Seaman Babstock. Botl men gave way on the oars with a wil and were just approaching him when he sank to rise no more. Caldwel was a single man and was to have been married after returning of this voyage. He was not of robus health and it is thought took a fainting spell as he went up the rigging and did not recover consciousness even when he struck the water. His parents reside here and Rev. J. Bel broke the sad news of their son's death to them to-day.
