Courts Treat Bad Boys on New Lines.

ADOPT CONSTRUCTIVE ATTITUDE

The bad boy is about to have his day in court.
The boy who steals fruit from the corner stand is going to come into his own. The girl who steals the jewelry from the woman whose baby she tends during the afternoon is going to have some real attention paid to her. The terror of the neighbourhood, who delights in setting fires just because he likes to see the flames, also will have his innings.

They are not "bad," from the point of view of the men and women dealing with them. The bad boy is merely the sick boy, and the bad girl is only the girl who has some defect, either physical or mental, or even both.

The boy who steals fruit may need to have his adenoids removed. The girl who steals jewelry probably has a system utterly polluted by the drainage from diseased tonsils. The terror of the neighbourhood very probably is deaf and needs medical care and protection.

Courts Undertake New Constructional Work.

Such is the new basis of constructional work of the courts. Such are the premises that men and women, probation officers, social workers and even the judges themselves are working upon in their treatment of the delinquent child. Not that he is bad, but that he is undoubtedly sick. Not that he needs institutional care and restraint, so much as he needs a thorough physical examination by a competent physician, together with whatever course of treatment or operation that physician may advise.

Take this scene, for example—this scene from real life, the story that really happened:
A stern-faced judge wrapped in his silken robes, sat at his bench in an oak-finished courtroom. The sunlight glancing through the window, touched the face of a little, pale-cheeked boy, standing by the side of the probation officer—the "prisoner" of the day. Such a little fellow he was—so small that he could barely reach the shore the railing, so small that spectators in the courtroom had to crane their necks to see him.

What had he done, this child—to find himself within the clutches of the law? Listen while the complaint is being read:

"This boy, your honor, goes to school in South Acton. While in the boys' basement the other day he threw lighted matches into a pile of waste paper, thereby starting a fire that might have destroyed the schoolhouse. That it did not was due to the prompt action of others, who were near."

Why Had He Done It.

The judge, leaning over the bar questioned the boy. Why had he done this thing? Had he no respect for the lives or the property of others? Didn't he know what wrong-doing was?

The child mumbled, plainly frightened. He was so little—and the law was so big! So little, like the little lad who calls you "Daddy," perhaps—that little lad in whom you are going to live over all your youth and all your fun. Only—he's going to have all the chances that you missed.

Something wrong about him caught the eye of his honor. Perhaps it was the evident frailness of the lad, the too pallid cheeks, the tired stoop of the shoulders, the whole general attitude that somehow spelled undernourishment and malnutrition to the practiced eye of the man. And so, instead of uttering some imposing sentence about the Lyman School or Reform School, he did this thing:

He motioned the guardian, or the father of the child to the bench, and his sentence was: "Take this child to a doctor and see that he has a thorough examination. After that we'll see what we can do. This case is continued."

It was Justice Prescott Keyes of the Central Middlesex Court in Concord, and his judgment and his wisdom are directly responsible for the fact that 11-year-old Earl Ladd will have no reform school record to his discredit. No sojourn to the Lyman School, or at Shirley awaits him. Instead, Earl Ladd was taken to one of the best physicians in Concord. An order of the court is an order to be obeyed and it was obeyed at once.

Examined By Doctor.

Earl Ladd was examined by a doctor, who recognized in the partly open mouth and the nasal tones the sign of adenoids. He is recovering and everybody concerned believes the operation will mean the turning point for him—not only in point of health, but in other things as well.

Girl With "Wrong Crowd."

When a girl gets in with the "wrong crowd," when she stays out nights, goes to movies and dances with unknown men, the very next step is that she finds herself in court; and, after that, she finds herself being examined by the Baker Foundation. If the home influence is wrong, she is removed to another home where the influence is better. If the crowd is too much for her, she is placed where there will be no crowd.

"It is all a part of the general trend toward constructive work with children, just as it has been going on with adults for some time," commented Herbert P. Parson, prohibition commissioner for Massachusetts. "It is an attempt to apply the remedy to the disease while the disease is in its infancy. But there are times when everything fails."

"Just now we are especially interested in those two boys concerned in the payroll hold-up, where the girl held them off, you know. They are boys of eighteen and nineteen, indicted now by the grand jury and awaiting trial. One of them was caught, and he told, so that the other one was finally caught also. Our records show that since they were 18 years old, both of these boys have been subject to our reconstructive processes. That is, they have been to the Lyman School and they have been to Shirley. Everything had been done for them in the work of reconstruction that could be done, though we did not employ the methods of examination, medical, psychological and social, that we are doing now."

"But all that we had applied had apparently failed. These boys were lawbreakers and now, beyond the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, they will have to stand trial. And they have admitted that they are responsible for a chain of daylight apartment breaks, as well as the other crime."

On the Right Track?

"Those things make you wonder," ruminated Mr. Parsons, "make you wonder if you are on the right track at all. Of course, the only way we can prove it is by watching the records of the men who come into the clutches of the law in the next six or eight years. The hold-up man, the apartment thief, the gunman, is a young man generally. He will be the man in that time who is examined for physical and for mental defects, who is being analyzed and examined to-day, to see what additions or subtractions to his make up may do for him."

THE LURE OF MONEY.

Oh, a dollar is a nice thing and a splendid thing to own.

In all the coins of all the world no fairer coin is known:
But there is something richer than the dollars you collect.
And something money cannot buy, and that's the world's respect.

A dollar's worth an honest deed and worth an honest trade.
There's joy in every silver coin when honestly it's made:
But all the silver dollars which the nation has to spend
Aren't worth a troubled conscience, or the good-will of a friend.

There isn't any money that is worth the price of shame.
The richest treasure on the earth is not an honest name.
And though you stole a fortune vast, you still would come to grief,
You might be very rich in purse, but still you'd be a thief.

Heed not the lure for money when it whispers of deceit.
Refuse to touch the silver coin which urges you to cheat:
There isn't any dollar worth a pale and haunted face,
Or any gold or silver worth the anguish of disgrace.
