The Rival Clansmen:

A Scottish Vendetta. CHAPTER V.

THE CATERANS OF BEN-A-SCHBUI—CAMERON AND IAN PLOT MISCHIEF—FLORA ALONE WITH

* * * * * *

Led by Cameron, Ian and the others who had followed Hector down into the underground vault turned to the right at the foot of the stair after the latter had been led away, and walked in the direction from which our hero had seen the light proceed.

They moved forward cautiously, for they were still in total darkness, until at length Cameron halted, and struck two knocks on some door or partition in front. The hooting sound which was heard above was repeated, after which followed the single sharp knock from Cameron, and the door was flung open.

The sight disclosed was a strange one. They were in a large cave—a vault of spacious dimensions—dimly lit up by a number of lamps and torches. The walls were dark and gloomy, but the weapons which were hung upon them reflected the light in bright though weird-looking rays.

Around the room, some seated on rough wooden seats, others squatted on the floor, and others standing, were from twenty to thirty men, all dressed in kitts, and apparently fully armed. Wild and lewless-looking fellows were they, all of them, with their dark scowling looks, and their torn, tattered attire, many of them being shoeless, other capless, while numbers had simply a worsted rag about their shoulders in lieu of a plaid.

A joyful expression crossed each face as Gameron and the others entered, and

A joyful expression crossed each face as Cameron and the others entered, and then the whole company with one accord sprang to their feet, and gave forth cher upon cheer until the vault resounded organ end wair.

again and again.
"Hail to the Cateran of Ben-a-chrui," shouted a voice, while another loudly exclaimed—

"Hail to the young chief of the M'Kenzies;" and the others taking up the cries reiterated them until their throats were hoarse and dry.
At the far end of the room were two empty chairs, slightly raised above the floor on a low platform. To these Cameron and Ian advanced, and seated themselves.

When the vociferous cheering had subsided, Cameron rose with a smile upon his face, and addresing those before him, since, Cameron rose with a simile door, said—

"Clansmen, or rather Caterans of Bena-chrui, we have again met together. Every face that I expected to see is before me. With that I am pleased, and it is well that it is so for another reason—your young Lieutenant will read in it a sign that your devotion to him as not decreased during his absence, and that you sympathise with him in the misfortunes which have lately befallen both himself and his kinsmen. Caterans, let me tell you that he is here to-night to meet you when weaker men would have been prostrated with grief, for but yesternight, as you are doubtless already aware, his father's spirit winged its way from the land of his kinsmen to the home of the faithful clansmen beyond. But our brave companion chose rather to bury his grief, and come, as he had promised, to be with you this evening. And Thave something else to tell you. You are all aware of the bitter foud which has existed between the McKenzies and the M-leods, and of the kow of the old chieftain of the McKenzies that he would exterminate the stock of the M-Leod's sons 'young Heetor' is if his power—is in our power, for Ian and I brought him a prisoner with us, and at this moment he lies in the Speechless cell."

Cameron had to wait until the great cell."

Cameron had to wait until the great burst of applianse which arose had subsided. Then he coutinued—
"Yes, Rory M'Kenzie has him firmly bolted and barred by this time, and he awaits our down. Shall you assist the young Chief to overcome his enemies or shall you not?"
