human mind clings to the notion that automobiles are extravagant to keep, designers have been working and perfecting automobiles to a point that has reduced the cost of running to a very lov figure.

Don't Stop to Reason. There are literally thousands of people who have never seriously considered owning a car, not because they could not afford to buy one, but because they could not afford to keep one. This thought fostered by the impression that the existed some years ago is not based upon thought lostered by the impression that existed some years ago, is not based upon the automobile as it exists now.

There are sold every year in the United States about 700,000 two-passenger buggies, and it is a fact that there are and as such there will always be a market for them.

But today is the day of the moderate priced car. If proof were necessary we only have to point to our western farmers, where even the most modest uses the automobile of moderate price.

Are Pianos For Rich Only. Why should the automobile be cited as an example of the extravagant? Why should it be cited any more than the piano, which is found in almost every home? I doubt if any one single invention has done any more good as a whole than the automobile. It has opened up a new territory. It has started the good more and the man living in the suburban towns in easy touch with
