evening brought forth a number of letters His correspondents, he maintained, did not reply to the arguments he advanced, but truthfully alleging that he was an enemy of the workingman and also, in some cases sneering at the fact that he once followed the occupation of an iron-moulder. He reiterated the arguments formerly advanced, and added that if the plan advocated by some were adopted of excluding immigrant old-time feudalism would be brought into existence and prosperity in were to attempt to prohibit others from entering their ranks, might not the farmers band together to resist the inflowing of agricultural immigrants, because their influx might increase the quantity of wheat growing, and consequently lower its price.

reaffirmed his assertion that every able-bodied man who entered the country was an accession of strength, power and wealth. As to being an iron-moulder, he said he was not ashamed of the fact but, on the other hand, was proud of the knowledge that he had worked his own way up. When a young man he had entered Toronto penniless, and saw the gentleman present who had first assisted

During the prayer, he made special reference to the loss of the Erskine church, and prayed that the citizens of Toronto might be moved to exercise their liberality in aiding the Rev. Mr. Smith and his congregation to rebuild.

THE SERMON.

Text: "For, as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription. TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you." Acts, 17th chap., 23d v.

The first part of the sermon was devoted to a description of Athens as it appeared at the time when Paul delivered his famous oration on Mars' Hill. Two of the principal sects existing at that time were the epicureans and the stoics, the former believing in the atheistic philosophy that the universe was the product of chance, and pleasure the end of life; the latter believing in a pantheistic theory. The universe to them was under an unchangeable laweven God was subject to it. In other words they were fatalists. After speaking to the followers of these two orders, Paul was brought before the supreme court, the judges of which sat in the open air on the summit of Mars' Hill. It was then he referred to "the unknown God," the inscription to whom he had observed. It means "agnosto theo," or the "agnostic God."

It was a remarkable thing that the agnostic of day object to the doctrines of foreordination and predestination because they would seem to deprive man of his freedom and yet clothe nature with these same attributes, making us the children of fate under the rule and force of the un-same attributes, making us the children of tems of fatalism the doctor gave his preference to the latter, though he believed the rather be ruled by an intelligent mind than by a blind force emanating from matter.

We have agnostics in this city, who though there be gods reject them all and erect a shrine to an unknown god which they worship, wondering all the while that religious people will do the same of a known god. They are trying to over the throne of Jehovah and substitute one one in its place without a king. The agnostic makes clear the necessity of a divine revelation, and proves the biblical statement "that the world by wisdom knew not God." He honestly confesses his ignorance of a god; the pagan, in the midst of his Gods acknowledges a divinity; the christian in his conscience experiences one.

Turning to the idea that man is essentially a worshipping creature, reference the state of the partial process of the audit office at the parliament buildings Saturday morning, and while being chased around tially a worshipping creature, reference was made to the reverential organ that exists in every brain. The other organs are brought into use, and would God have created a feeling of reverence without an existing being to worship?

The chief difficulty in dealing with an agnostic lies in the fact that he will neither affirm nor deny. He is like an eel—very difficult to seize. He is non-committal while christians were absolutely Their neutrality mocks human committal. Their neutrality mocks human reason and turns every man aside who wants to be a man. He (the preacher) believed in God and did not try to shrink to the negative side and hide himself in self-confessed ignorance. If the agnostic disbelieves in a God let him say so.

After pointing out the important part religion plays in the wars of the nation, and describing the different ideals of God that one held, the biblical description of God, as being of spirit, light and love—wise, strong, patient, peaceable, firm, impartial and generous was presented as being correct, and his hearers were admonished to follow and serve Him.

Trunk feels it most. The road is beginaing to block from Belleville up, with east-bound freight. Every siding has its delayed cars. The locomotive resources of the road are heavily taxed; a less number of cars can be moved by the same power; the boilers are susceptible to the cold and more fuel has to be used, often with little effect; occasionally they are stuck in a drift; and the men are all complaining of the privation they have to undergo. The passenger trains are delayed. The officers and men of the road appear to be doing their utmost with the resources placed at their disposal. Mr Walter Briggs, the well known hotel keeper of St. Andrew's market. Mr. Briggs was assisted by a committee composed of Messrs. T. Kennedy, J. Marvyn and T. Gibson. They had the hall beautifully decorated and prepared an excellent program of dances, which the ladies and gentlemen present enjoyed to their hearts' content. Everybody was made to feel perfectly at home, and all went merry as a marriage bell. Mrs. Briggs served a splendid supper at midnight, after which dancing was resumed and kept up till 3 o'clock Saturday morning. The guests then took their departure, a little tired perhaps but still feeling exuberant over the enjoyable time that they had spent. Walter's party will not soon be forgotten by those who participated in-it.

The Earnings of Litterateurs. Some interesting figures are given in the London Truth, showing the earnings of well-known writers. Disraeli, it is stated, made by his pen £30,000; Byron, £23,000. Lord Macaulay received £20,000 on account of three-fourths net profits for his history. Thiers and Lamartine received nearly £30,000 each for their respective nistories. Thackeray is said never to have received £5000 for any of his novels. Sir Walter Scott was paid £110,000 for eleven novels of three volumes each and nine volumes of Tales of my Landlord. For one novel he received £10,000, and between Nov. 1825, and June, 1827, he received £26,000 for literary work. Lord Lytton is said to have made £80,000 by his novels; years prior to the publication of Nicholas Nickleby; and Trollope in twenty years made £70,000. The following sums are said to have been paid to the authors for single tamous books: Romola, George Eliot, £10,000; Waverley, Scott, £700, Woodstock, Scott, £8000; Life of National Scott, £8000, Aymodela William S poleon, Scott, £18,000; Armadale, Wilkie Collins, £5000; Lallah Rookh, Thomas Moore, £3000; History of Rome, Goldsmith, £300; History of Greece, Goldsmith, £250; History of England, Goldsmith, £600; Vicar of Wakefield, Goldsmith, £60;

So he put an imaginary picture of old Parr on the front of his advertisement, with good effect. Holloway followed his exexample. Mr. Ingram, the founder and proprietor of the Illustrated London News, made his first fortune by Parr's life pills, as Holloway did by his. Mr. Ingram used to say that he always noticed on market days at the master and tyrant of England. This sacrifice of the poor to society would be an evil even were it for society's good, but as it was it was a growing corruption which, if not arrested, would finish by the destruction of the fabric. There was one method of preventing this crash, and that was so to stir up the minds of the outcast classes that they would insist on a complete change of the system, and the gradual substitution for it of constructive socialism, with commerce not, as at present, as
