notched and blunted, requiring the grindingstone and much honing to bring them again to a condition of use.

But on the morrow the bridegroom did not work in the smithy. His feet and limbs were in pain, and he sat before a looking-glass trying to shave, making faces which, said he, "should my bride see, she would never come within the door," And "For me to make faces on the happiest day of my life, of all days 1"

Luggy came in haste, calling:

"Laird! Laird Ramasine! they come! A whole crowd and a waggon with span of grey horses, decked in green branches and ribbons. What a dust they are raising on the road! And you not ready. Haste ye, haste ye, Mr. Ramasine."
