Making Wood Fire Resistant With Paint

By Forest Products Laboratory, U.S. Forest Service.

Fire-retardent paints are the most practical means so far discovered by the Forest Products Laboratory by which small amounts of wood can economically be made fire-resistant. The only other known methods of decreasing the inflammability of wood are to keep it wet or to inject into it certain chemicals under pressure. These methods, though more effective than painting, are usually either impracticable or too expensive to be considered.

Ordinary calcimine or whitewash has proved in tests to be as fire-resistant as any paint covering tried. It is cheap and convenient to use. Although it will not prevent the burning of wood exposed continuously to a high heat, a good coat of calcimine on wood will decrease the danger of a blaze spreading from burning cigarettes, sparks, matches and similar small sources of fire. Calcimine is, of course, more effective for inside than for outside use.

For exterior use, numerous patented fire-retardent paints are available. An effective outdoor paint which has been developed at the Forest Products Laboratory consists of linseed oil, zinc borate, and chrome green. This paint has maintained its fire-resisting properties through more than three years of exposure to the weather.
