A MISSION FULFILLED

CHAPTER XXXVI.
Friends in Adversity.

"Lady Teasdale," said Margherita, gently, "you are very, very good and kind to me. I will tell you all—or nearly all," she added, truthfully. "We are going to leave England and live abroad—in Italy, perhaps—for a time. We have lost a great deal of money, and are very poor; we shall be able to save there, and shall spend no more than what is necessary, and I hope in time will be able to pay back all we owe. But my father-in-law is very angry with us. He talks of disinheriting Keith, and leaving all his money to his daughters. I have written to him, but he is very angry indeed."

"Not with you, my dear! Surely he knows that you have not been extravagant!" Margherita hesitated. "He is angry with me because I will not blame Keith. Lady Teasdale, but Keith is my husband; we are one."

And then Lady Teasdale took the opportunity of slipping the packet of I O U's into her young friend's hands, with a lame explanation, which to Margherita at first was somewhat incomprehensible. But her face flushed as Lady Teasdale finished.

"It is you," she exclaimed, "it is Lord

A SIMPLE DRESS FOR MORNING (4104).

The practical mother is always on the lookout for designs which are simple enough for everyday dresses, for she appreciates not only their increased wearing qualities, but their appropriateness. The small child, who wears white dresses, suits one a day, and this means no small amount of laundering, which is a point to be considered. The dress sketched is just the thing for such wear as this, being suitable to any of the washing fabrics, albatross or cashmere. The tiny yoke relieves it from absolute plainness and might be trimmed with feather stitching, a narrow, embroidered insertion, or washable braid. For a child of 3 years only 2 yards of 36-inch material are needed.

4104—Seven sizes, 1-2 to 6 years.

ament, when the reaction of some stirring period has lowered all the moral barometer, and when the terrible question, the "Cul bono" of life is continually rising up and finding no response in the dull and empty chambers of the mind.

This morning he had been a little cheered by a most kind and sympathetic letter from his sister Florence—a letter full of pity uncolored by blame, Florence and he had always been the two members of the family most congenial to each other, and Florence (where her jealousy was not aroused) was neither of a censorious nor naturally of a selfish disposition. She was the only one of the Grange party who refused altogether to join in Mr. Ronaldson's fierce condemnation of his only son, and her sympathy was by no means devoid of balm to Keith's sore spirit. But, when Margherita had left him to go to Lady Teasdale, he had sunk again into one of his brooding fits, and he did not look up as she re-entered.

When, however, half timidly, she put the notes into his hand, relating what had passed between her friend and herself upstairs, he started up as if he had been stung.

"It's an insult!" he said; "I don't want charity. I shall send them back to Teasdale. They will be redeemed in time."

"Ah, Keith, my dear, why should we be so proud? Would we not do the same for a friend? Would it not be a pleasure?"

He fell back into his chair, silent and miserable. It was bitter enough to accept so great a boon even from so old and intimate a friend as Lord Teasdale; but he guessed it proceeded from him to accept it. And Margherita, whose wife intuition divined this, and who was not without some of the wisdom of the serpent, took care not to disturb the conversation, she told him of Lady Teasdale's offer regarding the portrait.

"So you see, sposo mio, you have an order already! Ah, you will get on, you see, if you only give yourself up to your painting. You will have many more orders in time."

"Perhaps I may, if they are all portraits of you, Margherita," he said, smiling sadly. "Every one loves you I think. Not that I wonder at it."

Her eyes sparkled. "I will be your model, caro mio, and you shall paint a grand, big picture, and send it up to the academy next year—a picture of a Capri coral girt, and we will go there, and you shall put in the real rocks and sea. Ah, how happy we will be! We will hire a little house, and live there together, Keith, my dear."

She bent down and laid her lips up on his head. He was silent, perhaps because the tears were standing in his eyes; but he took her hand and held it in his own.

"Sposo mio," she said after a moment, "tell me, how much money do you owe Colonel Stockton?"

"About two hundred, I think."

"We must pay him, dear."

"How can I, Margherita? I have overdrawn at the bank—I am in debt up to my eyes—I haven't a farthing."

"There is no one else—of that sort—to whom you owe money?"

"No one else, I have done my best to pay all my debts of honor. The poor tradespeople will have to go to the wall."

"We will pay them in time, caro mio. The house is well sold, and when we get the money for that and the furniture, we can pay off most of them. I will go round and tell them all before we leave that they must wait till then."

"You, Margherita! No; if anyone has to swallow dirt, it must be I, not you."

"No, dear, let me go. It is much worse for a man. They will all be civil to me; they will not say nasty things to me, nor make me swallow dirt."

Depressed as he was, Keith was bound to laugh, and seeing this, she laughed in sympathy.

LITERARY NOTES.

The first number of Putnam's Monthly appears this month. The regular contributors to "The Critic" are retained for the new magazine.

Young's Magazine for October has seventeen stories, which, while treating life from a realistic viewpoint, are far removed from commonplace. Humor is judiciously sprinkled among the pages, both in fiction and in "At the Sign of 'Eros'" and "On Broadway and Off."

The October St. Nicholas brings the first of the new series of fairy tales by Frances Hodgson Burnett. "The Troubles of Queen Silver-Bell" will be the fairy queen's recital of her troubles in Fairyland and of how these troubles came to be written. "How Winnie Hatched the Little Books" will be the story in the November number, followed in December by "Racketty Packetty House"; and there will be more of the series in following issues.

"Duncan Polite" was a good story. Its sale in Canada for a first novel was almost phenomenal. "The Silver Maple" by the same author, is a better story, and should have immense popularity. The hero, Scotty MacDonald—whose other name was Ralph Stanwell—is a fine type of young Canadian manhood. No less interesting are the humorous characters Old Farquhar, Danny Murphy and Weaver Jimmie—who appear and reappear in various chapters. The Westminster Co., Limited, publishers, Toronto.

A dainty bit of book-making is a recent publication by Thomas T. Crowell & Co., New York, entitled, "All the Year in the Garden," and compiled by Esther Matson. It is a daily calendar of apothegms in prose and verse in praise of gardens, that will greatly entertain and please the gardenmaker and the lover of the "out-of-doors." The editor has delved deeply into ancient and modern garden lore, and the 150 pages, culled from scores of leading writers, prove, indeed, a worthy vest. Beautifully printed and bound, this handsome little nature book will make a most attractive present or addition to one's library.

While the October Century brings to an end Anne Warner's rollicking story of travel, "Seeing France with Uncle John," new chapters of A. E. W.

Mason's "Running Water" carry Sylvia to her father in England, tangle the thread of the plot. Then there are six short tales: Edna Kenton's "The Doll Lady," Grace Ellery Channing's "A Perseus Generation," another of Harvey J. O'Higgins' tales of the New York firemen; Grace Lathrop Collins' "Justina's Playmate," Charles Bryant Howard's "A Voice from the Dark," and Edith Wyatt's "The Perfect Woman," a humorous tale of the editor of a "woman's department."

In the October Canadian Magazine the article by Hon. Ernest N. Warner on "Civil Service Reform in Wisconsin" will attract many readers, especially such as are looking for information as to the various phases of political reform. Some time ago Professor Leacock wrote an article on the decline of poetry, and now Susan E. Cameron, a Montreal educationist of standing, takes up the cudgels on behalf of the poets. She belabors the professor rather severely. There are two "Celebrities" this month: Agnes Maule Machar, novelist, poet and painter; and Mrs. Herbert Chamberlain, who is a daughter of the late Lieut.-Col. Williams, of Port Hope. Other illustrated articles follow, with the old Government House at Fredericton, the work and character of the late Bishop Bompas of Selkirk; and an account of the modern methods of securing "Purity in Domestic Products." The stories by two native writers, are especially worthy of mention.

"The World's Christmas Tree," (Charles Edward Jefferson) is a powerful plea by this vigorous speaker and writer, for the true spirit of Christmas is found in this dainty gift book. The author views as in a vision the present method of observing Christmas, and finds that "the human race has crystallized into a countless number of little circles, and from hand to hand around each circle the presents pass. 'I shall give something to you and I wonder what I shall get from you!—this is the unspoken thought.' Meanwhile the world falls, needs more of men are being forgotten and neglected. 'The World's Christmas Tree,' as Dr. Jefferson sees it, is the tree of Opportunity. Each person is privileged to hang something upon it for the benefit of mankind. 'What the world needs,' he says, 'is faith and hope, and love, justice and sympathy and temperance, science and truth and courage, patience and fidelity and kindness. These are the things which have been needed from the beginning, and they were never more needed than now.' Publishers, Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.

Among Duffield & Company's publishers, New York, fall announcements are George Brandes' "Reminiscences of My Childhood and Youth"; "Job," (Geronimo's Story of His Life), an autobiography of the famous Apache outlaw, "Chinatown, by Valda"; "The Pilgrim's Staff," a selection of the best devotional verses by Fitz Roy Carrington; new edition of "The Star of Bethlehem," a Christmas play, by Professor Charles M. Gayley.

Among the same firm's new fall books for children are "Little Nemo in Slumberland," "Boys and Girls, from George Eliot," "The Punch and Judy Book," by Helen Hay Whitney, with pictures in color by Charlotte Harding, and "Mother Goose: Her Book," with colored pictures, by Harry Smith.

Pandora Range

SAVES FUEL AND HELPS TO PAY FOR ITSELF.

It is not the price you pay for a range which makes it cheap or expensive, but the fuel it consumes after you get it.

If you buy a range which costs $5 to $7 less than a "Pandora" and it burns a ton, or only half a ton of coal more in a year, what do you gain? Nothing, but you actually lose money, besides putting up with all the inconveniences, troubles and extra work which are a certainty with a poor range.

The "Pandora" is equipped with many fuel-saving features which are not found on any other range. Hot-air flues are constructed so that all the heat from the fire-box travels directly under every pot-hole and around the oven twice—every atom of heat is used, and only the smoke goes up the chimney.

Sold by all enterprising dealers. Booklet free.
