IN THE PROCESSION OF ANTS.

It is not all in the point of view. One can see far and wide, and yet miss the meaning. To the men who pass over the land in aeroplanes some things are clearer than to those who walk close to the surface: to those who look down from the tops of sky-piercing towers or out from fifty-story windows, the city is a great plateau with deep clefts running here and there at odd angles. Yet that is not the city. The checker-board of brown and green fields and forests and glittering water is not the nation. One may look with distant eye upon Europe, or China, or mysterious Africa; or at history—the French Revolution, the Black Plague, the Deluge, if you please—
